SECT. 2.—Interests which may be Created by Will.

1039. The power of disposition by will is not at the testator's caprice, but extends only to the creation of those interests which are recognised by law, and no others (f).

1040. Certain incorporeal hereditaments, such as rentcharges (g) and easements (h), may be created by will.

1041. Successive and future estates and interests, legal or equitable (i), may be created by will in both real (k) and personal estate, including chattels real (l) and chattels personal (m), provided that they satisfy the rules of law relating to perpetuities respectively applicable to such interests (a).

In so far as such future estates in real estate are created by way of legal remainder, they are subject to the rules of law applicable to such limitations in a conveyance operating at common law (b).

Other future interests take effect by way of executory limitation (c). No particular technical device, such as a use (d) or trust (e), is necessary in a will in order to create such interests, either when they spring up in the future or when property is made to shift from one person to another on any future event (f).

1042. There may be created by will a legal estate pur autre vie where the cestui que vie or one or more of the cestuis que vie is or are unborn, at all events in cases where the latter is or are necessarily ascertained at such a time within the limits allowed by the law as to perpetuities, that there can be no hiatus or discontinuity in the estate (g).

It appears that such a legal limitation is not possible in common law assurances; see 49 Sol. Jo. 793 (citing 2 Preston, Abstracts, 148; Doe d. Pemberton v. Edwards (1836), 1 M. & W. 553), where Re Ashforth, Sibley v. Ashforth, supra, is criticised.

Where lands are devised conditionally on the payment of a legacy the testator may give the legatee an express right of entry to secure the payment (h).

The duration of an interest, as distinct from the conditions attached to a gift (i), cannot be defined by reference to certain matters the investigation of which the court considers contrary to public policy (k).

1043. Formerly, although the use of a chattel could be made the subject of successive limitations without conferring any legal rights on the donee (l), a gift of the chattel itself for a life or other limited time was an absolute gift (m). Now, however, at all events with regard to chattels which are not consumed in the use of them, successive limitations of the chattel itself, whether it is a chattel real (n) or chattel personal (o), may be made by will, so as to confer enforceable legal rights on the second and subsequent donees (p) indefeasible by any act or default on the part of the first donee (q); such limitations are therefore of an executory nature (r), and are termed executory bequests.

Chattels

With regard, however, to specific gifts of chattels which are consumed in the use of them, the use and the property in the chattels can primâ facie have no separate existence(s); and the old rule primâ facie still applies, that a gift of a life interest is an absolute gift, and that a limitation over after a life interest is ineffectual(t). The old rule, however, does not apply in a case where the chattels, by the terms of the will or by implication from the circumstances of the case, are given to the successive legatees in the character of money's worth, and are not intended for personal use or consumption by the legatee (a). Thus, if they are stock of a farming or other business given in connexion with a gift for life of that business, at all events where the stock is necessary to carry on the business, and the business and stock are intended to be kept up (b), the first legatee does not take absolutely (c). Nor does the old rule apply to residuary gifts of personal estate so far as they comprise such chattels, because under another rule (d). to

The fact that the personal estate bequeathed is of a description not likely to be given for limited interests has been considered in construction of the will (Porter v. Tournay (1797), 3 Ves. 311, 313; Manning v. Purcell (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 55, 61, C. A.; Randfield v. Randfield (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 225, 236, 237; and see *Re Moir's Estate, Moir v. As regards growing crops from time to time on a farm, the life tenant takes absolutely, although intended to keep up the business (Steward v. Cotton (1777), 5 Russ. 17, n.; and see Bryant v. Easterson, supra).

Wright*, supra, at p. 351, it was suggested, and in Myers v. Washbrook, supra, it was held, that the old rule did not apply in any case to farming stock, although not given in connexion with a business, and DARLING, J., suggested also that grain, roots and other similar things, which are consumed by being used as food for cattle, or by being sown in the ground, are not within the rule, because they are consumed with the object of being reproduced. In Bryant v. Easterson, supra, however (not cited in Myers v. Washbrook, supra), where the obligations of the first legatee under the lease of the farm to consume such produce on the land were considered, the rule was held to apply to such produce and other farming stock. A provision that the first legatee should not be liable for depreciation assists a construction giving him an absolute interest; see Breton v. Mockett (1878), 9 Ch. D. 95.

(d) The rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), Howe v. Aylesbury (Countess) (1802), 7 Ves. 137, as to which see titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

effectuate a presumed intention that the legatees should successively enjoy the same subject-matter (e), the chattels must in such a case be sold and only the interest of the proceeds paid to the legatee for life (f), unless, by the terms of the will, he is given the right to enjoy them in specie (g). Further, in every case, by the express terms of the will, the first legatee, whether taking an absolute or a limited interest, may be made responsible for the value of the chattels (h). The testator may expressly give a right to consume so much of certain consumables as the donee may require during his lifetime; the donee then has an absolute interest only in the chattels actually consumed, and the testator may validly make a gift over of the amount remaining unconsumed (i).

by Will.

Where the legatees are given successive interests in the chattels, the property in the chattels at law vests on the assent of the executor in the first legatee, and on the happening of respective future contingencies in the other successive takers (k); the assent of the executor to the first is an assent to all (l).

A gift may be made as a conditional gift or limitation subject to the rules restricting such conditions and gifts (m); and a further gift to take effect on a condition not being fulfilled may be made subject to the like restrictions (n), and subject also to the restriction that the second gift must fit in sensibly with the previous gift so as to show what is to be done with the property (o).

being given (a). A mere option to purchase to a named donee may be personal to the donee and not transmissible (b); on the other hand, a gift for a named consideration is prima facie construed as transmissible to the donee's representatives and assigns (c). Such a gift, according to the context of the will and the circumstances, may be an option over the testator's interest as a mere bounty (d), or may create the relationship of vendor and purchaser between the testator's estate and the donee (e).

The donee must as a rule strictly comply with any terms of the option as to the time of signifying his exercise of the option (f), time of payment (g) or otherwise. He is entitled on exercising the

(a) For examples of options to purchase at a valuation, see Edwards v. Edwards (1837), 1 Jur. 654; Waite v. Morland (1866), 12 Jur. (N. S.) 763, C. In such a case, in order to affect persons claiming under him, the donee must do some act to show his exercise of the option (Radnor (Earl) v. Shafto, supra, at p. 455 (apparently an acceptance by will might suffice)). See also McKendrick v. Lewis (1889), 15 Victorian Law Reports, 450 (after option exercised, obligation to pay was not personal to donee).

(c) Taylor v. Cooper (1846), 10 Jur. 1078; Belshaw v. Rollins, [1904] 1 I. R. 284, 289.

(d) In such a case it appears that the donee is a mere devisee under the Real Estate Charges Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113), s. 1 (Locke King's Act), and does not take free from incumbrances (see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 288); he therefore may not be entitled to an abstract of title (Brooke v. Garrod (1857), 2 De G. & J. 62, affirming S. C., 3 K. & J. 608; Re Davison and Torrens (1865), 17 L. Ch. R. 7).

(e) In such a case the donee is entitled to take free from incumbrances and to have the title shown at all events to this extent Green v. Massey (1892), 31 L. R. Ir. 126; Re Wilson, Wilson v. Wilson, [1908] 1 Ch. 839. It appears that a gift conditional on the giving of any consideration (Blover v. Morret (1752), 2 Ves. Sen. 420, 422), such as a release of an existing right of dower (see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 276, notes (k)–(m)) or of an existing debt due from the testator (ibid., notes (g)–(i)), prima facie constitutes the donee a purchaser, so as to give him priority for his legacy, but it seems that where the consideration is the conveyance of land to third persons, and not to the testator's estate, the legatee conveying the land accordingly has no lien on the land for payment of his legacy (Barker v. Barker (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 438); and if the gift is conditional on releasing a claim against a third party the donee has no priority (Re Whitehead, Whitehead v. Street, [1913] 2 Ch. 56). See also Davies v. Davies (1901), 20 New Zealand Reports, 636 (gift of term of years conditional on payment of rent etc.).

(f) In cases where an offer has to be made by the trustees, or the price has to be fixed, time may run only from communication of the terms to the donee (Lilford (Lord) v. Powys Keck (No. 1) (1862), 30 Beav. 295; Austin v. Tawney (1867), 2 Ch. App. 143). If time is directed to run from an event actually happening in the testator's lifetime, but assumed by the testator to happen after his death, the direction may be construed so that time will run from the death of the testator (Evans v. Stratford (1864), 2 H. & M. 142). If no time is fixed, the donee is allowed a reasonable time (Huckstep v. Mathews (1886), 1 Vern. 362).

(g) Master v. Willoughby (1706), 2 Bro. Parl. Cas. 244; Dawson v. Dawson (1837), 8 Sim. 346; Brooke v. Garrod (1857) 2 De G. & J. 62. In all these cases there was a gift over on non-payment within the time; the mere signification of acceptance was not sufficient to comply with the will option to the surplus, after deducting the price, on any sale after the testator's death made on a compulsory purchase (h) or in an action to administer the testator's estate (i). Where two or more options to purchase the same property are given to different donees without any priority, and all are exercised concurrently, the effect may be that all the options fail to take effect (k).

Interests which may be Created
by Will.

1046. A testator who has several properties all having the same description may by his will give one of them to a donee, leaving the choice of that one to the donee (l); and generally the testator may give rights to select property to any value or amount (m). The fact that the donee is to be able to select may appear either by express words in the will, or by reasonable inference from it (n), and where no limit is placed on the right of selection, the court treats the donee as entitled to take the whole property to which the right applies, if he duly shows that such is his choice (o).

selection.

If, however, the will shows that the testator intends to give a particular property to a legatee, and, owing to the testator having several properties answering the description in the will of the particular property given, the court is unable to say either from the will itself or from extrinsic evidence (p) which of the several

In the case of a gift of a number of shares out of a larger number, some of which are fully paid and others only partly paid, the legatee has an absolute right to select the best shares (*Jacques v. properties the testator referred to, the gift must fail for uncertainty, and the court cannot, in order to avoid an intestacy, change the will or construe it as giving to the legatee the option of choosing one of the properties (q).

Where a right of selection is given to one donee, and the remainder of the property after selection is given to another donee, specifically and not by way of residuary gift, and the right of selection lapses by the death of the first donee in the testator's lifetime, the gift to the second donee also fails (r).

Part III.—Testamentary Capacity.

SECT. 1.—Soundness of Mind.

Soundness
of mind.

1047. It is necessary for the validity of a will that the testator should be of sound mind, memory and understanding, words which time out of mind have been held to mean sound disposing mind, and to import sufficient capacity to deal with and appreciate the various dispositions of property to which the testator is about to affix his signature (a); but a will is not revoked by the subsequent insanity of the testator (b).

Meaning.

In order to constitute a sound disposing mind, a testator must not only be able to understand that he is by his will giving his property to one or more objects of his regard, but he must also have capacity to comprehend and to recollect the extent of his property and the nature of the claims of others whom by his will he is excluding from participation in that property (c). For this purpose it is essential that no disorder of the mind shall poison his affections, pervert his sense of right, or prevent the exercise of his natural faculties, that no insane delusion shall influence his will in disposing of his property, and bring about a disposal of it which if the mind had been sound would not have been made (d). Perversion of moral feeling does not constitute unsoundness of mind (e).

Eccentricity.

Eccentricity alone does not prevent a man from disposing of his property by will (f); and though the extravagance of the provisions of a will may be sufficient to place the burden of proving capacity upon the person propounding it, yet it is not in itself conclusive evidence of unsoundness of mind (g).

(q) Asten v. Asten, [1894] 3 Ch. 260, 263, adopted in Re Oheadle, Bishop v. Holt, [1900] 2 Ch. 620, C. A., per Lord ALVERSTONE, M.R., at p. 623.

(g) Ausien v. Graham (1854), 8 Moo. P. C. C. 493

1048. Generally speaking, the law presumes sanity, and no evidence is required to prove the testator's sanity if not impeached (h). When, however, it is impeached and the whole case is before the court on evidence, the court must pronounce against the validity of the will unless the evidence on the whole is sufficient to establish affirmatively that the testator was of sound mind at the time of execution (i).

SECT. 1.
Soundness
of Mind.
Presumption

1049. The burden of proof therefore that a testator was of sound mind at the date of executing his will is upon the person who sets up the will (k); but where habitual insanity does not exist the proof of actual insanity at the time of executing the will must come from those who impeach the will (l). The issue of capacity is one of fact (a). The burden of proof of sanity is considerably increased when it appears that the testator had been subject to previous unsoundness of mind (b), and in such a case a will should be regarded with great distrust, and every presumption should in the first instance be made against it (c); especially where the will is an inofficious one, for the justice or injustice of the disposition may throw some light upon the question of the testator's capacity (d).

1050. Once insanity before the date of the will in question has been established, the burden lies on the party propounding the will to show that it was made after recovery or during a lucid interval (e). It is not, however, necessary in order to constitute a lucid interval that the subject thereof should be restored to a vigorous or active state of intellect as he had enjoyed previously to the visitation of the lunacy (f).

interval.

1051. Where the testator has been found lunatic by inquisition from a period prior to the execution of the will, this, though not conclusive against the will, is sufficient to require the party propounding it to prove that the testator was of sound mind when the will was executed (g).

SECT. 1.
Soundness
of Mind.

Delusious.

1052. The true criterion of insanity is the existence or non-existence of delusion, that is, the belief in facts which no rational person could believe (h).

The existence of a delusion compatible with the retention of the general powers and faculties of the mind is not, however, sufficient to overthrow the will, unless the delusion is such as was calculated to influence the testator in making it (i). Thus, the mere existence of a delusion in the mind of a person making a disposition is not sufficient to avoid it, even though connected with the subject-matter of the disposition (k). It is a question of fact whether the delusion affected the disposition (l).

1053. In cases where unsoundness of mind arises from want of intelligence occasioned by defective organisation, or by supervening physical infirmity, or by the decay of advancing age, as distinguished from mental derangement, such defect of intelligence is also a cause of incapacity. In these cases, however, though the mental power may be reduced below the ordinary standard, yet if there is sufficient intelligence to understand and appreciate the testamentary act in its different bearings, the power to make a will remains (m).

SECT. 2.—Infants.

Infants.

1054. Except in certain special cases (n), no will made by any person under the age of twenty-one years is valid (o).

SECT. 3.—Married Women.

Statutory
disposition.

1883, is enabled to dispose by will of property to which her title accrues after that date, including any wages, earnings, money, or property gained or acquired by her (q).

SECT. 3.
Married Women.

The statutory provision (r) that a will is to be construed to speak from the death of the testator applies to the will of a married woman dying after the 5th December, 1893, made during coverture, either before or after that date (s), whether she is or is not entitled to any separate property at the time of making it, and such a will does not require to be re-executed or republished after the death of her husband (t). Her will executed during coverture operates on all the property she has at her death (u).

1056. Irrespective of statute, a married woman can dispose by will of property to which she is entitled as executrix so far as to appoint an executor to the original testator for the purpose of continuing the chain of representation (a); of personal estate, not settled as her separate property, if her husband consents to the particular will, and survives her, and does not retract the consent before probate (b); of real and personal property settled in equity as her separate property and the savings thereof and rents and profits of real estate to which she is entitled (c); and of real and personal property over which she has a power of appointment (d).

SECT. 4.—Aliens.

1057. Real and personal property of every description may, since the 12th May, 1870, be taken, acquired, held, and disposed of by an alien in the same manner in all respects as by a natural-born British subject (e). This provision does not, however, apply to property to which any person has or may become entitled by reason of any disposition made before that date, or in pursuance of any devolution by law on the death of any person dying before that date (f).

Aliens.

SECT. 5.—Convicts.

1058. There seems never to have been any personal incapacity to prevent a convict from making a will, but under the old law of forfeiture for treason and felony and of attainder the convict ceased to have any property on which such will could operate (g). Since the 4th July, 1870, forfeiture for treason and felony has been abolished (h), and the convict's property may be vested in an administrator (i); but it seems that the convict has full testamentary capacity (k).

Part IV.—Capacity to Benefit under a Will.

SECT. 1.—In General.

Ascertain-
donee

1059. There must be a donee capable of being made the owner of the thing given, at the time when the gift is to vest in interest (l). As a general rule, whoever may be a grantee under a gift inter vivos, whether in a conveyance at common law, under the Statute of Uses or otherwise, may be a donee under a will (m); and the testator is not restricted to donees who are in existence at the date of the will, though the donee must always be described with certainty, or must be capable of being ascertained on evidence which is admissible (n). The description may, if the will requires, or allows,

Incapacity of Various Persons.

Wife.

Persons dead, and their

1063. A testator's wife has from early times been capable of taking under his will (d).

1064. In general a gift by will cannot be made to a person who is dead at the date of the will (e), and the gift fails if the donee is dead at the death of the testator, even though he is alive at the date of the will (f); the representatives of such persons take no interest under such gifts. The burden of proof that the donee was alive at the death of the testator so as to be capable of taking benefits under the will is on those deriving title under the donee (g).

A gift may well be made, however, to form part of the estate of a deceased person (h); and further, even where the donee predeceases the testator, in certain cases by statute (i), and in every case by the addition of a sufficient substitutional gift (h), the property may pass as if the donee had survived the testator, or may be made to form part of the donee's estate.

Roman Catholics etc.

1065. Individual Roman Catholics are no longer under a disability to take any gift (l); and the fact that a donee is a Jesuit or belongs to any society under vows as to the property of its members does not affect his right to take a benefit (m).

Monasteries etc.

1066. A testator cannot give property by will to any superstitious uses (n); nor, it seems, to any order or society of the Church of Rome bound by religious or monastic vows (o), as distinct from the individual members of such orders (p); or for or to any other purpose or object forbidden by statute or by public policy (q).

1067. A donee who has obtained a gift by fraud or undue influence is liable to have the gift set aside (r). Similarly, where a legacy is given to a person under a particular character which he has falsely assumed for the purpose of obtaining the bounty, and which alone is shown or is inferred to be the motive of the bounty, the law does not permit the donee to avail himself of the legacy on the ground of fraud (s). In these cases the question must be raised in the court of probate (t).

(u) Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, [1892] 1 Q. B. 147, per FRY, L.J., at p. 156: "it appears to me that no system of jurisprudence can with reason include among the rights which it enforces rights directly resulting to the person asserting them from the crime of that person. If no action can arise from fraud, it seems impossible to suppose that it can arise from felony or misdemeanour." The rules, similar to that in the text, adopted in other systems of jurisprudence in general depend on the principle that the donee is unworthy to take as a beneficiary (erbunwürdig), and that the deceased would presumably have disinherited his slayer or revoked the bequest to him (see Code Napoleon, ss. 727, 901; German Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch, ss. 2329, 2344; Wilson, Digest of Anglo-Muhammadian Law, ss. 267, 275; Lundy v. Lundy (1895), 24 Canada Supreme Court Reports, 650, 654), but this principle is not applicable to English law (see note (i), p. 540, post). The rule laid down in Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, supra, is, it appears, restricted to the assertion of a claim by the criminal or his representatives, and third parties bona fide acquiring a title to personal property through the criminal may in some cases have protection; see titles BILLS OF EXCHANGE, PROMISSORY NOTES AND NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS, Vol. II., pp. 511-513; CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 684 et seq. (restitution of property); PERSONAL PROPERTY, Vol. XXII., p. 395 (rights annexed to mere possession); SALE OF GOODS, Vol. XXV., p. 198 (revesting of property in stolen goods).

(a) The incapacity is said not to depend on the trial or conviction of the donee, but on the fact of murder or manslaughter itself (see Ellerson v. Westcott (1895), 88 Hun's Reports (New York), 389, 393); the conviction is evidence of the fact (In the Estate of Crippen, [1911] P. 108, 112). If there is any possibility of a question whether the donee has been guilty of the crime, that must be tried in court, but proof of a conviction, upheld by the Court of Criminal Appeal, renders the fact "conclusively proved" and "indisputable" (In the Estate of Hall, Hall v. Knight and Baxter, [1914] P. 1, C. A., per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at pp. 4, 7).

testator, or, it seems, to have caused the death of the testator by any act which is a felony or misdemeanour (d), cannot claim to take (e) under the testator's will (f) as against other persons claiming under the testator (g); but, it appears, this is not the case if, for example, the will is made in the interval between the wound and the death (h).

1069. There is, however, no incapacity merely on account of the unmeritorious character of the donee, as distinct from some invalidity in the intention of the testator (i).

Lundy v. Lundy (1895), 24 Canada Supreme Court Reports, 650. The motives and degree of moral guilt of the crime are not considered to be important; see the latter case in the court below, sub nom. McKinnon v. Lundy (1894), 21 Ontario Court of Appeal Reports, 560, where the distinction was taken; In the Estate of Hall, Hall v. Knight and Baxter, [1914] P. 1, C. A., per HAMILTON, J.J., at p. 7.

(d) See In the Estate of Hall, Hall v. Knight and Baxter, supra, per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., at p. 2. As to how far this may differ from manslaughter, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 580 et seq. It appears that the rule does not apply to excusable or justifiable homicide (Lundy v. Lundy, supra, at p. 652).

(e) As to the power of felons in general to take, see p. 541, post. In In the Estate of Hall, Hall v. Knight and Baxter, supra, it was assumed that the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Viet. c. 23), had nothing to do with the matter. There appears, however, to be no reported case before that Act in which the Crown, owing to the disability in question, lost property acquired by the felon at the time of conviction, and otherwise forfeitable to the Crown. In Prince of Wales, etc. Association Co. v. Palmer (1858), 25 Beav. 605 (referred to in In the Estate of Crippen, [1911] P. 108, 115, n., as deciding a point similar to that in question), the Crown disclaimed, and the decision is grounded on fraud.

(f) It appears from certain American decisions that there is no similar restriction on the capacity to take on the death of another person where the right to take is conferred by statute without qualification, such as the right of one of the next of kin under the Statutes of Distribution (see title DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, Vol. XI., pp. 1 et seq.), who may take even where the intestate is murdered by him (Re Carpenter's Estate (1895), 170 Pennsylvania Reports, 203 (parricide); Re Johnson's Estate (1905), 29 Pennsylvania Superior Court Reports, 255 (wife murderer)); or such as a statutory right to take as heir (Shellenberger v. Ransom (1894), 59 North Western Reporter, 935, C. A.), or a right to dower (Owens v. Owens (1888), 100 North Carolina Reports, 242); but there may be a restriction in other cases of common law rights (Boz v. Lanier (1904), 79 South Western Reporter, 1042 (husband not entitled to take murdered wife's choses in action)); the point appears to have been assumed also in In the Estate of Crippen, supra.

(g) It appears that the property goes to the persons who under the will would have been entitled thereto had the donee died before the testator see In the Estate of Crippen, supra.

(h) "It cannot be denied that a will by any one in favour of the person who killed him is good, if made in the interval between the wound and the death" (Lundy v. Lundy, supra, per TASCHEREAU, J., at p. 653). Apparently, the effect of revival (see p. 575, post) or republication (see p. 577, post) after the wound would be the same.

(i) Thellusson v. Woodford, Woodford v. Thellusson (1799), 4 Ves. 227, 312, 329 (a will is not affected "on account of the unmeritorious object in the view of the testator"); S. C. (1805), 11 Ves. 112, 145, H. L. (regret that such a will should be maintained "goes no farther than as a motive to see whether . . . it is an attempt to make an illegal disposition"). In the civil law, as administered by the Ecclesiastical Courts of Probate, it appears to have been the rule that a legacy to a heretic, apostate, traitor, felon, excommunicate person, outlawed person, bastard, unlawful college, libeller, sodomite, or usurer was void (2 Swinburne, Testaments, 7th ed., 1070. The capacity to be a donee under a will is distinct from the capacity to receive the gift. Thus, an infant may be a donee under a will, but cannot give the executor a receipt for the gift, unless expressly or impliedly authorised to do so by the testator (k). Similarly, a traitor or felon (not having killed the testator (l)) may be a donee, but the property and the right to give a receipt for the gift may be vested in the administrator of his property (m). A married woman can take under a will, and, except in cases where her husband has rights in the gift under the old law, can give a receipt for the gift (n). A person of unsound mind may be a donee (o); but an executor having notice of the unsoundness of mind cannot get a good receipt from such a person himself (p).

Where the disability to receive the gift which is in question arises from the principles or custom or positive law of a foreign Part V.), but this was not the case at common law (Shep. Touch. (ed. Preston) 414; as to felons, see the text, infra; as to bastards, see p. 542, post; and as to institutions, see pp. 543 et seq., post). The crime of a person named as executor, however, may be a special circumstance for refusing him a grant of probate, under the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73 (In the Estate of Crippen, [1911] P. 108, 111).

(k) See titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 271; INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., pp. 75, 76, where the question whether a parent or guardian can give a receipt for an infant's legacy is also considered. In the case of an infant legatee the executors can obtain a good discharge by payment into court under the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 42, re-enacting the Legacy Duty Act, 1866 (36 Geo. 3, c. 52), s. 32, and other subsequent enactments, now repealed (Re Salaman, De Pass v. Sonnenthal, [1907] 2 Ch. 46). Mere appropriation and accumulation of the dividends may not exonerate the residue of the estate (Rimell v. Simpson (1848), 18 L. J. (ex.) 55); Re Salaman, De Pass v. Sonnenthal, supra, although by this means the executors may in a proper case become themselves free from liability (Re Hall, Foster v. Metcalfe, [1903] 2 Ch. 226, 233, C.A.). For a form of legacy to an infant, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., p. 425.

(o) In the case of a conditional gift the court has jurisdiction to order the committee to do for the lunatic whatever is necessary to comply with the conditions imposed on him (Re Sefton (Earl) (a Person of Unsound Mind), [1898] 2 Ch. 378, 386, C.A.). The lunacy, however, may be an act of God preventing performance, and the lunatic's representatives may take on his death free from the condition if it is a condition subsequent (Re Greenwood, Goodhart v. Woodhead, [1903] 1 Ch. 749, C.A.).

(p) The executors may obtain a discharge by payment into court in the Chancery Division; see Re Parker's Will (1888), 39 Ch. D. 303, C.A.; title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES, p. 175, ante. As to payments out of court in the Chancery Division for the benefit of the lunatic, see Re Upfull's Trust (1851), 3 Mac. & G. 281; Re Irby (1853), 17 Beav. 334, not followed in Re Marfarlane (1862), 2 John. & H. 673; Re Law (1861), 7 Jur. (N.S.) 410; and title LUNATICS AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND, Vol. XIX., p. 411. If the executors in proper time honestly appropriate and set apart the legacy and invest it and accumulate the dividends after appropriation, they are free from responsibility for the legacy, in the case of an adult legatee of unsound mind (Pothecary v. Pothecary (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 738, not following Rimell v. Simpson, supra). As to the authority of a committee or quasi-committee appointed by the court, see title LUNATICS AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND, Vol. XIX., pp. 432 et seq.

country, especially of a penal nature, it is not regarded by the English court (q).

SECT. 3.—Illegitimate Children.

1071. A doubt may arise whether the illegitimate children or other illegitimate relatives of the testator or a named person take under a gift in a will. The question depends upon, first, whether the words of the will describing the donees indicate such children or relatives (r), which is a matter of construction of the will (s); and, secondly, whether they are such persons as the law allows to be provided for in this manner.

1072. It is a rule of law grounded on public policy that gifts cannot be made by will to the illegitimate children or other illegitimate relatives of any person, who are not born or begotten at the death of the testator, by a description expressly or impliedly referring to them as such (t). In the case of a gift to the future illegitimate children of a woman, without further description, this rule is the only restriction in this respect (u).

Further, there cannot be a valid gift to an illegitimate child not alive at the date of the will, and described only by reference to the fact of its paternity (v). Where, however, the child is described expressly or impliedly by reference to the reputation of its paternity (as in the case of a gift to the children which a particular woman is reputed to have by a particular man), the gift is good, provided that the child in question has acquired the reputation (a) of such paternity at the testator's death (b).

(q) Worms v. De Valdor (1880), 49 L. J. (ch.) 261, followed in Re Selot's Trust, [1902] 1 Ch. 488 (both cases as to the appointment of a conseil judiciaire of a French prodigue, where, however, the foreign law did not vest the property of the prodigue in the conseil judiciaire); see titles ACTION, Vol. I., p. 17; CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., pp. 283, 284.

(r) A gift to illegitimate children living at the date of the will, and clearly referred to, is valid; see Metham v. Devon (Duke) (1719), 1 P. Wms. 529; Darnett v. Tugwell (1862), 31 Beav. 232; Bentley v. Blizard (1858), 4 Jur. (N. S.) 652. Thus, illegitimate children living at the date of the will can take under a gift to children "legitimate or otherwise" (Howarth v. Mills (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 389), or to "the children of A. by her putative husband or any other person" (Re Brown's Trust (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 239). It is sufficient if the children are referred to by name (Rivers's Case (1737), 1 Atk. 410).

(s) As to the presumptions in construing gifts to "children" and other relatives, and the cases in which illegitimate relatives may take under such gifts, see p. 735, post.

As to this rule in the case of deeds, see Blodwell v. Edwards (1596), Cro. Eliz. 509, commented on in Occleston v. Fullalove (1874), 9 Ch. App. 147, 165, 171; Ebbern v. Fowler, [1909] 1 Ch. 578, C. A.

As to children en ventre sa mère, see note (d), p. 543, ante.

(a) Reputation in such cases, it appears, means not that of rumour or fame spread by gossip, but that which springs from acknowledgment, conduct and life (Occleston v. Fullalove, supra, at p. 164).

(b) Metham v. Devon (Duke), supra; Occleston v. Fullalove, supra. Evidence can be admitted only for the purpose of ascertaining who had 1073. Subject to the above rules, a sufficiently designated illegitimate child who is alive (c) or en ventre sa mère at the date of the will (d), or is alive (e) or en ventre sa mère at the date of the testator's death (f), may take under the will (g).

The fact that all the intended donees, including those excluded by these rules, were to take as a class does not prevent the gift taking effect in favour of those who are not excluded (h).

acquired such reputation (Wilkinson v. Adam (1813), 1 Ves. & B. 422, 466, 467, affirmed (1823), 12 Price, 470, II. L.; Swaine v. Kennerley (1813), 1 Ves. & B. 469).

(g) So long as the provision is limited to children in esse when the document takes effect it is more in accordance with public policy that provision should be made for them than that such a provision should be beyond the scope of the law and the offspring should become a burden on public funds (*Re Loveland, Loveland v. Corporations, Institutions, and Societies.

Statutory provisions.

How far mortmain licence required.

Gifts of personal property.

1075. Devises to certain corporations (p) or certain kinds of corporations (q) are authorised by special statutes, and the general provisions as to assurances in mortmain (r) do not apply to assurances (including wills) of land limited in amount for certain specified purposes (s).

The statute enabling devises to be made to charitable uses has not the effect of dispensing with a licence in mortmain in the case of a devise to a charitable corporation (t). It follows that land devised to a corporation for charitable uses must be sold unless the corporation is exempt from the mortmain restrictions (u).

Where a corporation is empowered to acquire and hold lands in mortmain, it seems that a landowner may alien his land to the corporation without a licence for that purpose (b). A devise to a company incorporated under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (c), by a testator not licensed to alien lands in mortmain is accordingly valid (d).

The Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), repealed the old Mortmain Acts, but as the repeal did not operate retrospectively, testamentary gifts made by testators dying prior to the 13th August, 1888, are subject to the old law, as to which, and as to the history of the mortmain restrictions, see Jarman on Wills, 6th ed., pp. 84 et seq.; Shelford, Law of Mortmain; Grant, Law of Corporations; 2 Bl. 1077. A devise or bequest to a perpetual institution or society, whether corporate or unincorporate, upon a non-charitable trust (f) may be rendered void by the rule against perpetuities (g), as, for example, where the property is given or becomes subject to a trust which may last for an indefinite period and prevents the members of the institution from disposing of it as they think fit (h). A bequest of money to be spent as income is, however, valid (i), as also is a gift which is construed as a gift to the individual members (k).

SECT. 1.—Formal Validity in General.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Testamentary Form not Essential.

1078. Testamentary form is not necessary to constitute a valid will (m) provided that the document is executed in accordance with the provisions of the English law; but the intention of the deceased that the document shall operate after his death must be clear (n). Such intention may be proved by parol evidence (o).

Testamentary form unnecessary.

SECT. 1.

Validity in General.*Testamentary Intention.

Will in form of deed.

for a will.

1079. It is not necessary that the testator should intend to perform or be aware that he has performed a testamentary act (p). If the intention is that the operation of a document is dependent on the death of the person who executes it, it is testamentary in substance; and if the formalities of execution are complied with, such a document will be admitted to probate (a).

1080. Where a document bears upon its face a testamentary intention, it is not to be considered as a deed merely because it bears a seal or is in other respects in the form of a deed (b); and a deed not intended to have any operation or effect until the settlor's death is testamentary (c). On the other hand, a voluntary settlement reserving a life interest to the settlor and containing a power of revocation is not testamentary (d). A fortiori, an instrument which is not revocable and which comes into operation in the settlor's lifetime is not testamentary (c).

1081. An instrument duly executed, though apparently intended as preliminary to a more formal document, may be admitted to

L. R. 1 P. & D. 241; In the Goods of Coles (1871), L. R. 2 P. & D. 362; see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 158. Similarly, evidence may be given that the document was not intended to be testamentary, although in form it appears to be so (Trevelyan v. Trevelyan (1810), 1 Phillim. 149; Nichols v. Nichols (1814), 2 Phillim. 180; Lister v. Smith (1863), 3 Sw. & Tr. 282; In the Goods of Nosworthy (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 44). A statement in the document that it is not intended to be a will seems to be conclusive (Ferguson-Davie v. Ferguson-Davie (1890), 15 P. D. 109).

(p) Milner v. Foden (1890), 15 P. D. 105, per HANNEN, P., at p. 107. Thus, the following instruments have been held to be testamentary: a deed of gift (Rigden v. Vallier (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 252, 258; Habergham v. Vincent (1793), 2 Ves. 204; Thorold v. Thorold (1809), 1 Phillim. 1; In the Goods of Morgan (1866), L. R. 1 P. & D. 214); articles of agreement (Green v. Froud (1674), 3 Keb. 310); a draft on a banker (Bartholomew and Brown v. Henley (1820), 3 Phillim. 317); a direction for payment by bankers (Jones v. Nicolay (1850), 2 Rob. Eccl. 288); an order on a savings bank (In the Goods of Maraden (1860), 1 Sw. & Tr. 542); a letter (Passmore v. Passmore (1811), 1 Phillim. 216, 218; Denny v. Barton (1818), 2 Phillim. 575; In the Goods of Mundy (1860), 2 Sw. & Tr. 119); an invalid nomination under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 39) (In the Goods of Baxter, [1903] P. 12; see title FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, Vol. XV., p. 153); and see the other informal instruments admitted to probate under the old law mentioned in Masterman v. Maherty (1829), 2 Hag. Eccl. 235, 247.

Formal Validity in General.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Writing.

1082. Every will (h) must be in writing and signed (i) by or on behalf of (k) the testator, and such signature must be made or acknowledged (l) in the presence of two witnesses at one time (m), except that any soldier on actual military service, or mariner being at sea, may dispose of his personal estate without writing (n). Necessity for writing.

1083. There are no restrictions as to the materials with which, and upon which, a will may be written (o). A will may be made (p) or altered in pencil as well as in ink (q), though pencil alterations are prima facie deliberative (r); and if in a will mainly written in ink blanks are filled up in pencil before execution, the pencil additions are included in the probate (s). A printed or lithographed form may be used, or part of such a form may be utilised (t). Methods of writing.

SECT. 2. signed by the testator, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction (b). The signature must be intended by the testator as an act of execution (c).

Methods of Signature.

1085. A mark or initials (d) are sufficient if intended to represent a signature (c), even though the testator's hand is guided in making it (f), and whether the testator can write or not (g). A stamped signature may be sufficient (h); and sealing a will with a seal bearing the testator's initials has been held sufficient (i), though a mere sealing is not (k). The signature, however, must have been made with the purpose of authenticating the instrument, and accordingly a signature intended merely to guard against other sheets being interpolated in a will is not sufficient (l).

Passing a dry pen over a signature already written is not a good subscription of a will (m); but it may amount to an acknowledgment of his signature by a testator (n).

Assumed name.

1086. Signature in an erroneous or assumed name, if intended as the name of the testator, is enough (o). Similarly, where a testator puts his mark to a will in which he is wrongly named, the execution is valid (p).

Sub-SECT. 2. -- Signature on Testator's Behalf.

signature must be made in his presence and by his direction (q). The person so signing may be one of the attesting witnesses (r); and a signature of such person's own name expressly on behalf of the testator is sufficient (s). The direction to sign may be implied from the conduct of the deceased and from the res gestæ (t), but the testator must in some way indicate to the two witnesses present that the signature was put there at his request (u).

SECT. 2. Signature.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Place of Signature.

1088. It is now provided by statute (b) that every will, so far only as regards the position of the signature of the testator or of the person signing for him, is deemed valid if the signature is so placed, at (c) or after or following (d) or under or beside (e) or opposite to the end of the will, that it shall be apparent on the face of the will that the testator intended to give effect by such his signature to the writing signed as his will (f). The validity of the will is not affected by the circumstance that the signature does not immediately follow the end of the will (g); or that a blank space intervenes between the end of the will and the testator's signature (h); or that the signature is on a page or side containing no clause, paragraph or disposing part of the will (i); or that there is sufficient space in the preceding page to contain the signature (k). No signature is operative, however, to give effect to any disposition which is underneath or which follows it (l), or to any disposition or direction inserted after the signature has been made (m).

Signature
constructively
will.

1089. In some cases, words which are physically beneath—either wholly or partially—the signature have been considered to be above it either by reason of the mode of writing (n) or by reason of the use of asterisks or other signs of interpolation (o). Where the court is satisfied that the testator's signature really follows the dispositive part of a testamentary paper, though it may occupy a place on the paper literally above the dispositive part, such part may be admitted to probate (p). The mere fact that the executed part of the will terminates with an incomplete sentence continued overleaf is not, however, sufficient to justify the admission of the words following the signature to probate (q).

several sheets.

1090. Where a will consists of several sheets, it is not necessary for the testator to sign all the sheets, but at the time of execution all the sheets must be attached in some way (r), though not necessarily mechanically (s); and it may be presumed, when witnesses only saw the last sheet of the will, that the whole was in the room (t). The presumption, where several sheets constituting a connected disposal of property are found together, is that they all

SECT. 2.
Signature.

1091. Declarations by the testator made both before and after execution are admissible to show what were the constituent parts of the will (b).

Extrinsic evidence.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Acknowledgment of Signature.

1092. A testator must either sign his will or acknowledge his signature in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time (c). It is not necessary for the testator to say "This is my signature"; acknowledgment may even be by gesture (d), and may be made in answer to a question (e); but the witnesses must see, or have an opportunity of seeing, the signature of the testator, and if what takes place involves an acknowledgment by the testator that the signature is his, that is enough (f). The signature to be acknowledged may be made either by the testator or by another for him (g).

Acknowledgment.

1093. In the absence of proof that the witnesses did not see, or could not have seen, the signature of the testator, and in the absence of fraud, the courts presume, where there is a proper attestation clause, or where the evidence shows that the testator knew the law, that the attesting witnesses saw the acknowledged signature (h). Even where the attestation clause is informal, the presumption omnia rite esse acta is applied if the attesting witnesses identify their signatures and that of the testator, though they have no recollection of the circumstances in which the will was executed (i).

Presence of witnesses.

1094. The production of a will by a testator with his signature upon it, and a request by him, or by someone for him in his presence (j), to the witnesses to attest it, is a sufficient acknowledgment of the Presumption that will was already signed.

signature under the statute (k); and the court is not bound to have positive affirmative evidence from the subscribing witnesses that the testator's name was signed to the paper before they subscribed it (l). The mere circumstance of calling in witnesses who had no opportunity of seeing the testator's signature, without giving them any explanation of the instrument which they are signing, does not, however, amount to an acknowledgment of the signature by a testator (m), especially when there is no evidence that the testator's signature was on the will at the time (n).

SECT. 3.—Attestation.

SUB-SECT. 1. Mode of Attestation.

Signature in presence of both witnesses

1095. The signature of the testator must be made or acknowledged in the presence of two witnesses, and such witnesses must attest and subscribe the will in the presence of the testator (o). The testator's signature must be made or acknowledged when both the attesting witnesses are actually present at the same time (p) and both witnesses must attest and subscribe after the testator's signature has been so made or acknowledged (q). Each witness should be able to say with truth that he knows that the testator has signed the document (r); and there is no sufficient acknowledgment unless the witnesses either saw or had the opportunity of seeing the signature, even though the testator should expressly declare that the paper to be attested is his will or should state that his signature is inside the will (s).

Attestation

1096. The attestation is in the presence of the testator within the meaning of the statute if he might have seen the witnesses sign had he chosen to look; it is not necessary that he should actually see them sign (t). But the testator must be mentally capable of recognising the act which is being done, and conscious of the transaction in which the witnesses are engaged, and if the testator becomes insensible before the witnesses subscribe the attestation is insufficient (u).

SECT. 3.
Attestation.

It is not essential for the attesting witnesses to sign in the presence of each other (a), though it is usual for them to do so (b).

1097. Though no form of attestation is necessary (c), yet it is always desirable to have an attestation clause showing that the requirements of the statute have been complied with (d). In the absence of such a clause an affidavit of due execution must be obtained from one (e) of the attesting witnesses, or from some person who can depose to the facts, before probate can be obtained in the usual way on the executor's oath alone.

Form of attestation.

The attesting witnesses are not required to subscribe their names on any particular part of the will, provided that the signatures are clearly intended to attest the testator's signature (f), and it can be shown that their signatures were affixed at a time after any words in the will below such signatures have been written in (g). Where, however, the attestation is not on the same sheet of paper as the signature of the testator, the attestation must be on a paper physically connected with that sheet (h).

write his name or make some mark (i) intended to represent his name (k). A will may be subscribed by marks even though the witnesses are capable of writing (l). Initials of an attesting witness are a sufficient subscription (m), unless placed on the will presumably for the purpose of identifying alterations (n).

A witness may subscribe a will in any mode which sufficiently identifies him as the person attesting the will (o). Thus, a sufficient description of the witness without his name (p) or signature in a wrong name (q), where the signature is intended to represent the person signing and not some other person as being the actual witness (r), is a valid subscription. Signing part of his name by a witness is not sufficient unless the part signed was intended to be a complete signature (s); and a mere acknowledgment of an existing signature, as by passing a dry pen over it (t), is also insufficient (a), though the pen may be guided for a witness unable to write (b).

1099. The court must be satisfied that the names of the witnesses were subscribed on the will for the purpose of attesting the testator's signature (c); where the court is satisfied that a signature has been added without any intention to attest the execution, it excludes such signature from the probate (d).

1100. There is a presumption of due execution where there is a proper attestation clause (e), even though the witnesses have no recollection of having witnessed the will (f). In the absence of an attestation clause a will which on its face appears to have been duly executed is assumed to have been duly executed although no evidence of its due execution is forthcoming (g). The presumption of due execution applies as well where the testator's name has been affixed by his direction as where he has himself written his name (h). This presumption may be rebutted by evidence of the attesting witnesses, but the evidence as to some defect in execution must be clear, positive and reliable (i), since the court ought to have in all cases the strongest evidence before it believes that a will, with a perfect attestation clause and signed by the testator, was not duly executed (k).

Attestation.

Presumption of due execution.

In cases in which the presumption is opposed to testimony it is the duty of the court not to allow undue weight to the circumstances on which the presumption is founded on the one hand, and, on the other, not to lose sight of them (l). The burden of proving due execution, whether by presumption or by positive evidence, rests on the person setting up the will (m).

Proof of due execution.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Capacity of Witnesses.

1101. A will is not invalid because at the time of the execution or at any time afterwards any person attesting the execution is incompetent (n) to be admitted a witness to prove its execution (o), and executors (p), creditors and their wives or husbands (q), and beneficiaries and their wives or husbands (r), are all admissible witnesses to prove the execution of a will or the validity or invalidity thereof.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Effect of Gifts by Will or Codicil to Witness.

Gift to witnesses.

1102. Any beneficial (s) devise, legacy, estate, interest, gift, or appointment, other than charges or directions for the payment of debts, so far as it concerns any person attesting the execution of any will by which it is given, or the wife or husband of such person, or any person claiming under such person, or wife or husband, is null and void (t). Where there is a joint tenancy under a will and one of the joint tenants attests the will, the other takes the whole (u).

A gift to a witness merely as trustee is valid (b); but where by means of a parol trust a beneficial interest is attempted to be conferred upon an attesting witness the gift is, it seems, void (c), unless perhaps where the witness at the time of attestation is unaware of the secret trust in his favour (d).

Gift by codicil.

1103. A gift by will to a legatee is not forfeited by his attesting a codicil confirming the will (e), unless he receives a benefit by codicil, as, for instance, if the codicil makes a contingent gift absolute (f); but the fact that the codicil, by revoking gifts in the will, increases the residue of which he gets a share is not such a benefit (g). Conversely, a codicil duly executed confirming a will containing a gift to an attesting witness to the will renders the gift valid (h), and the validity so acquired is not destroyed by the (r) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 15.

(s) A power in a will enabling a solicitor-trustee to charge profit costs against the estate is such a beneficial interest (Re Barber, Burgess v. Vinnicombe (1886), 31 Ch. D. 665; Re Pooley (1888), 40 Ch. D. 1, C. A.).

(t) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 15. This provision does not, however, affect questions of construction; thus, where a testator by a will to which his daughter's husband was an attesting witness gave all his real and personal estate to his wife for life, to be equally divided between such of his children as should be living at her death, and in the event of any of his daughters being married at his wife's decease, such proportion as they might be entitled to should be left to them and their children, it was held that the daughter's children were not to be disappointed by her disability, but took an immediate interest in her share as tenants in common (Re Clark, Clark v. Randall (1885), 31 Ch. D. 72); and see Re Townsend's Estate, Townsend v. Townsend (1886), 34 Ch. D. 357; Aplin v. Stone, [1904] 1 Ch. 543.

legatee attesting a subsequent codicil (i). The gift is only avoided where the witness has attested the instrument under which he takes (k), and a gift in a will consisting of separate sheets of paper separately attested may be good if the legatee has not attested the sheet on which his gift appears (l).

SECT. 3.
Attestation.

1104. The marriage of a devisee to an attesting witness after attestation does not affect the validity of the devise (m).

Subsequent marriage of witness.

1105. If more persons than are necessary sign their names to a will, the presumption is that they did so as witnesses; and consequently legacies thereby given to them or their spouses are void. If more than two persons appear to be attesting witnesses, some of them being legatees, all the names may be included in the probate, so that the question whether the legatees did or did not sign as witnesses may be decided in a court of equity (n). In some cases, however, the Court of Probate has itself dealt with this question, and has omitted the names from the probate (o). If after execution is complete a third person adds his name, the court does not without cogent evidence conclude that the third person signed as a witness (p).

SECT. 4.—Will by which Power is Exercised.

1106. No appointment made by will in exercise of any power is valid unless executed in the manner required for the due execution of a will; and every will so executed, so far as respects execution, and attestation, is valid as an exercise of a power of appointment by will although other solemnities required by the instrument creating the power are not observed (p).

Exercise of power by will.

1107. A will appointing personal property is not effective until admitted to probate (q). Any document recognised as a valid testamentary instrument by the Probate Division is capable of

L. T. 70); see Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 22, which makes a probate receivable in evidence in all courts of the United Kingdom without further proof thereof; and compare Re Tootal's Trusts (1883), 23 Ch. operating as an execution of a power of appointment by will over personal estate (r), and the probate of an English will made by a domiciled Englishman is sufficient evidence of the due execution of the power so far as formalities are concerned (s). In the case of a will of a donee of a power domiciled abroad probate may be granted in England though the will is invalid by English law, if valid according to the law of the testator's domicile (t), or though the will is invalid by the law of the domicile if valid according to English law (u); but in the latter case administration with the will annexed is usually granted instead of probate (a).

Part VI.—Formalities of Will Made Abroad.

English land. 1108. The law applicable to immovable (b) property, namely, land of any tenure, is the lex loci rei sitæ, and therefore the formalities required for the devise or bequest of immovables, whether realty or personalty, and the validity of a will of lands in England are governed by the ordinary testamentary law of England (c).

Foreign land. 1109. The devolution of immovables situate in a foreign country is determined in accordance with the lex situs or law of such foreign country (d). The English courts have no jurisdiction to determine the validity of a will dealing with foreign immovables (e), but the proceeds of sale of land abroad must be considered in an English administration as answering to the description of pure personalty (f).

Disposition of movables. 1110. The law of the country in which the deceased was domiciled at the time of his death regulates the decision as to what constitutes his last will, and as to whether and how far it is valid, without regard to the place of his birth or of his death, or to the situation of his movable property (g).

SECT. 3.

Movables.

The burden of proving that a will ought not to be admitted to probate lies upon the party impeaching it; but where the party impeaching the will establishes the fact that a testator had lost his English domicile, having gained another elsewhere, and died in the acquired domicile, the burden of proof is in such circumstances shifted, and it lies upon the party propounding the will to prove that the law of the acquired domicile is such as to authorise a will in the form propounded (h).

Part VII.—Alterations and Erasures.

1111. No obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration made in a will after execution is valid unless duly executed (i), except so far as the words or effect of the will before such alteration shall not be apparent (k).

Alterations.

"Apparent" means apparent on an inspection of the instrument, not apparent by extrinsic evidence (l). Words are apparent if experts using magnifying glasses when necessary can decipher them and satisfy the court that they have done so (m); but it is not allowable to resort to any physical interference with the document so as to render clearer what may have been written upon it (n). Where, by reason of obliteration or erasure, words are not apparent, there is entire destruction pro tanto of the will, and therefore so far a revocation (o).

PART VII.
Alterations
and Erasures.

Time of

Evidence.

1112. The burden is upon the person who seeks to rely upon an alteration in a will to adduce some evidence that the alteration was made before the will was executed (p). In the absence of evidence the presumption is that alterations, interlineations, and erasures were made after execution (q); and if the original words are not apparent the probate is granted in blank as to those words (a), or if they are apparent, the probate contains the original words (b). Very slight affirmative evidence is, however, sufficient to rebut this presumption (c) unless the alterations are important (d).

The presumption may be rebutted by evidence of declarations of testamentary intention made before or at the time of execution (e), or by evidence of other persons that the alterations were made before execution (f). Internal evidence furnished by the document itself may be considered, and the circumstance that a clause would be perfectly meaningless without the interlineation is material (g). Any evidence which, having regard to the circumstances, reasonably leads to the conclusion that the alterations were made before execution is sufficient (h). Thus, where alterations are necessary to supply blanks left in a will, such as for the names of legatees or the amounts of legacies, and these blanks are afterwards filled in, the presumption is that they were inserted before execution; and an interlineation which appears to have been written with the same ink and the same pen as the rest of the will, and which supplies a blank in the sense, is presumed to have been written before execution (i).

1113. Where the testator indicates, as, for instance, by asterisks, the place in the will where matter written before execution is intended to come in, such matter may be regarded as a valid interlineation (k); but words following the executed part of a will cannot be treated as an interlineation merely because they complete an otherwise incomplete sentence in the executed part (l). PART VII.
Alterations
and Erasures.
Interlineations.

1114. Alterations made in a will after it is signed may be validated by a due acknowledgment of his signature subsequently made by the testator (m), or by the signatures of the testator and the witnesses in the margin or in some other part of the will opposite or near to such alterations (n). The initials of the testator and the witnesses are (o), but the initials of the witnesses alone are not (p), sufficient for this purpose. The testator and witnesses do not, however, fulfil the statutory requirement by merely going over their signatures with a dry pen. There must either be an execution of the alteration or a re-execution of the will (q). Subsequent alterations.

1115. Unattested alterations in a will are validated by a subsequent codicil confirming the will (r), unless it appears from the codicil or otherwise that the alterations were merely deliberative (s), because a codicil is a republication of a will and validates it at the time of execution of the codicil (t). If the codicil takes no notice of alterations, the presumption is that they were made after the date of the codicil, but this may be rebutted by evidence (a). Effect of codicil on alterations.

1116. A will altered after the testator's death must, if possible, be restored to the state in which it was at the deceased's death, and probate is given without such alteration (b). Alterations by stranger.

Part VIII.—Revocation and Revival.

SECT. 1.

SECT. 1.—Revocation by Marriage.

Revocation by Marriage.

1117. Every will made after the 31st December, 1837 (c), by a man or woman, except a will made in certain circumstances in exercise of a power (d), is revoked by his or her marriage (e), even though the will is made in actual contemplation of the marriage (f).

Such revocation takes effect as regards movables where the testator or testatrix is domiciled in England at the moment of the marriage (g), and the domicile of a wife becomes at the moment of marriage the same as the domicile of her husband (h). The English courts determine the effect of marriage, as regards the revocation of a will of movables previously made, by the law of the country where the testator or testatrix is domiciled at the moment of the marriage (g). Where, however, by the law of the domicile, marriage does not revoke a testamentary disposition, a subsequent change of domicile does not affect its validity (i).

Will in exercise of power of appointment.

1118. A will exercising a power of appointment is not revoked by the testator's subsequent marriage unless the persons to take in default of appointment take in the capacity of the testator's heir, customary heir, executor or administrator, or next of kin under the Statute of Distributions (k). The reason for this exception is that

(k) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 18. The fact that the persons to take in default of appointment are the statutory next of kin of the appointor does not prevent the exception applying if the gift in default of appointment is to them in another capacity, such as, for instance, as children of the appointor (In the Goods of Fitzroy (1858), 1 Sw. & Tr. 133; In the Goods of Worthington (1871), 20 W. R. 260). Where freeholds were in default of appointment limited to the testatrix, her heirs and assigns, her marriage revoked her will exercising a power, the exception in the statutory provision not applying (Vaughan v. Vanderstegen (1853), 2 Drew. 165, 194); but the exception applies to a case where the new family of the testator can derive no benefit from such revocation, because revocation of the appointment only operates in favour of those entitled to take in default of appointment (l).

SECT. 1.
Revocation
by Marriage.

1119. A will comprising property not subject to a power of appointment and also property subject to appointment by the testator, but falling within the exception in the section, is revoked by the subsequent marriage of the testator quâ the property not subject to the power, while holding good as an appointment under the power (m).

Partial revocation by

SECT. 2.—Voluntary Revocation.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

1120. A will is of its own nature revocable, and therefore though a man should make his testament and last will irrevocable in the strongest and most express terms, yet he may revoke it, because his own act and deed cannot alter the judgment of law to make that irrevocable which is of its own nature revocable (n).

Revocation.

1121. To effect a revocation there must be an intention to revoke (o). If anything is done by the testator or by his direction which, if there was an intention to revoke, would amount to a revocation, the presumption of law from such act is in favour of the existence of the animus revocandi, but this presumption may be rebutted by evidence showing that the animus revocandi did not exist (p). An act done without such intention is wholly ineffectual (q), even if such act results in the destruction of the will (a). Thus, where a testator destroys the will through inadvertence (b), or under the belief that it is useless (c) or invalid (d), or has already been revoked (e), or where he is drunk at the time

Revocation.

Proof of

of an alleged revocation (f), or insane though he may afterwards recover (g), no revocation results.

1122. The intention to revoke must be as clear and free from doubt as the original intention to bequeath or devise (h), and must be shown with reasonable certainty (i). It must be a present intention, the expression of an intention to revoke at some future time or by some future instrument not being sufficient (k); but a revocation accompanied by the expression of intention to make a new will which is not in fact made is nevertheless an effective revocation (l).

The intention to revoke may be evidenced by the declarations of the testator, especially if such declarations were contemporaneous with the act of revocation (m), or such intention may be inferred from the nature of the act done (n).

Once due execution of a will is proved, the burden of showing that it has been revoked lies upon those who set up revocation; and in the absence of proof revocation is not presumed (o).

revocation.

1123. Voluntary revocation (p) of a will can now only be effected in one or other of the following modes, namely (q):—(1) By another will or codicil (r) duly executed (s); or (2) by some writing (t) declaring an intention to revoke the same and duly executed as a will (s); or (3) by burning, tearing or otherwise destroying (u) the will, by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his direction, with intention of revoking the same, but no conveyance or other act made or done subsequently to the execution of a will of or relating to any real or personal estate therein comprised, except an act by which such will shall be revoked as the statute prescribes, prevents the operation of the will with respect to such estate or interest in such real or personal estate as the testator has power to dispose of by will at the time of his death (b).

Voluntary
Revocation.

1124. As a will speaks from the testator's death (c), and can only be revoked in one or other of the prescribed modes (d), a testator cannot delegate the power to revoke his will after his death (e).

Sub-SECT. 2.—By Later Will or Codicil.

1126. An earlier will is revoked by a later will or codicil expressly revoking such earlier will or all former wills (g), and no particular form of words is required for the purpose of effecting such revocation (h). An express clause of revocation is not essential (i), but if inserted in general terms operates as a rule to revoke all testamentary instruments previously executed by the testator (k), including testamentary appointments (l). Such a clause is not, however, conclusive evidence of an intention to effect a complete revocation (m), and may be shown to have been inserted by mistake and without the approval of the testator (n).

revocation.

(b) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 20. The result of this provision is that the earlier cases in which it was formerly held that a will was revoked by an alteration of the estate of the testator are no longer law (Forde v. De Pontès (1861), 30 Beav. 572, 593). The provision refers to an interest of the testator remaining in the property, and does not apply to cases where the thing meant to be given is gone (Moor v. Raibbeck (1841), 12 Sim. 123, 139; Blake v. Blake (1880), 15 Ch. D. 481, 487, following Gale v. Gale (1856), 21 Beav. 349). Last will.

The mere insertion in a will of the words "last and only will" does not necessarily work a revocation of all previous testamentary instruments (o); but where it is clear from the general tenor of the last will that the testator did not intend an earlier will to remain in force, the earlier will is revoked (p).

revocation.

1127. Part only of a will may be revoked (q). The animus revocandi must govern the extent and measure of operation to be attributed to an act of revocation which may be done with the intention of revoking the whole or part only of a will (r). Where revocation of part makes the rest of the will unintelligible, total revocation results (s).

Subsequent
will.

1128. Where a later unambiguous will deals with the testator's entire property, it revokes all earlier wills, even though it contains no clause of revocation (t); and if the later will practically covers the same ground as an earlier one, it must be taken as being in substitution for it, and probate of the later will alone is granted (u). Even where the later will does not completely cover the whole subject-matter of an earlier one, if it can be collected from the language of the testator that he intended to dispose of his property in a different manner from that in which he disposed of it by the earlier will, the earlier instrument is revoked (v). The mere fact of making a subsequent testamentary disposition does not, however, misunderstanding by the testator as to the effect of the insertion of a clause of revocation is not sufficient to justify the omission of the clause from the probate (Collins v. Elstone, [1893] P. 1).

(o) Simpson v. Foxon, [1907] P. 54, following Lemage v. Goodban (1865), L. R. 1 P. & D. 57; see Loftus v. Stoney (1867), 17 I. Ch. R. 178, where two wills, one described as "last" and the other "duplicate," were admitted to probate, and the court of construction held that the will marked "last" was the real will. So the express confirmation in a third codicil of a will and one of two previous codicils does not of itself operate to revoke the other codicil (Follett v. Pettman (1883), 23 Ch. D. 337).

(r) Re White (1879), 3 L. R. Ir. 413, 416, C. A. But a mere recital of the testator's object in revoking a gift does not, it seems, limit the operation of an absolute revocation (Holder v. Howell (1803), 8 Ves. 97).

work a total revocation of a prior will, unless the latter expressly or in effect revokes the former, or the two are incapable of standing together (x).

Sect. 2.
Voluntary
Revocation:

If there are two wholly inconsistent testamentary documents of the same date, or undated, and it cannot be ascertained which of them was executed first, neither document can be admitted to probate (a); but in the absence of express revocation, a later inconsistent disposition which is not valid in itself does not revoke an earlier disposition (b).

1129. Where a subsequent will is not forthcoming, the burden of showing that it revoked an earlier will is on the person alleging revocation, and there must be proof of a difference of disposition (c). Accordingly, where a testator makes two wills and the later is lost or destroyed, unless there is evidence to show that it expressly or impliedly revoked the earlier will, in which case the result is an intestacy (d), the earlier will is entitled to probate (e).

Lost subsequent will.

1130. Where there are several testamentary instruments which are not wholly inconsistent, they are considered, so far as they can be read together, as constituting the last will of the testator (f); for any number of testamentary instruments, whatever be their relative date or in whatever form they may be, can be admitted to probate as together constituting the last will of the deceased (g). The established rule is not to disturb the prior disposition further than is absolutely necessary for the purpose of giving effect to the later one (h); and the presumption against implied revocation is strengthened where the testator uses words showing an intention not to alter his testamentary disposition except in certain specific respects (i). The question is, what disposition did the testator intend, not which or what number of papers did he desire or expect to be admitted to probate (k); consequently the presumption of revocation, arising from apparent inconsistency of testamentary instruments, may be rebutted by parol evidence that the testator did not intend revocation, where there is some ambiguity on the face of the documents as to whether the deceased meant the particular disposition to be part of his will (l), or by extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances (m). If, however, there is no ambiguity on the face of the papers, parol evidence cannot be admitted to show that revocation was not intended (a).

Codicils.

1131. Where a will is revoked by a subsequent codicil, the question whether an intermediate codicil is also revoked is one of construction. If the revoking codicil distinguishes between the will and subsequent codicils, as, for instance, by date, the latter are not revoked (b).

The revocation of a will does not now revoke a codicil to it by implication (c), for a properly executed testamentary paper can only be revoked by the methods prescribed by statute (d); but upon proof that a testator by cutting off his signature to his will intends to revoke a codicil to it written on the same piece of paper, the codicil may also be revoked (e).

of revocation.

1132. A writing declaring an intention to revoke (f) a will must, to be effectual, be executed in the manner in which a will is required to be executed (g). Such a writing is not, however, admitted to probate (h) unless itself of a testamentary character (i).

Destruction.

1133. A will may be revoked by burning, tearing (k), or otherwise destroying it, by the testator or by some person in his presence and by his direction, with the intention of revoking it (l). For this purpose there must be both an act of destruction (m) and an intention (n) to revoke, and the will must be actually injured (o). A symbolical destruction is not sufficient (m). Nor is a will revoked by being destroyed by mistake (p) or in a fit of madness (q), since all the destroying in the world without intention does not revoke a will (r).

The intention to revoke a will wholly or in part may be evidenced by proof of the expressed intention of the testator in doing the act, or of circumstances from which it may be inferred, or by the state and condition to which the instrument has been reduced by the act itself (s). Evidence of intention.

1134. The destruction animo revocandi of one part of a will executed in duplicate amounts to a revocation, whether both parts, or only one part, was in the possession of the testator (t); and the presumption generally is that by such destruction the testator intended complete revocation. This presumption is not so strong where the testator destroys one of two duplicates both in his own possession, especially if he has previously made alterations on the part so destroyed (a). Destruction of duplicate.

Voluntary
Revocation.

Incomplete
destruction.

1135. If a testator leaves unfinished the work of destruction which he had commenced, either in consequence of the remonstrance or interference of a third person or by his own voluntary change of purpose, the will is unrevoked, the intention to revoke being itself revoked before the act was complete (b). Similarly, probate is granted of a will the signature to which has been partially erased and rewritten (c), or where the testator has cut out but replaced the part containing the signatures of the witnesses (d), but not where the testator's signature has been cut out and pasted on in the previous position (e).

by stranger.

1136. Destruction by a third person in the presence and by the direction of the testator is effectual (f). On the other hand, destruction by the testator's direction, but not in his presence, is ineffectual (g); nor can the testator revoke his will by subsequent ratification of a previous unauthorised act of destruction by a third person (h). A testator may, however, adopt his own previous act of destruction (i).

destruction.

1137. There must be such an injury, with intent to revoke, as destroys the entirety of the will (k); but it is sufficient if its essence as a will, though not the materials of which it is composed, are destroyed (l). Thus, cutting off the testator's signature (m) or scratching it out (n), unless done under a mistaken belief (o), or cutting off by the testator of the signature of attesting witnesses, if done animo revocandi, works a revocation (p) unless otherwise explained (q), but the erasure by the witnesses of their own signatures does not revoke the will (r). SECT. 2.

Where a portion of a will not necessary to its validity as a testamentary instrument is destroyed, the question is whether the portion destroyed is so important as to raise the presumption that the rest cannot have been intended to stand without it, or whether it is unimportant and independent of the rest of the will (s). Where a testator destroys some sheets of a will and substitutes others, but does not re-execute the whole will, there is a revocation (t); but merely tearing off part of the commencement of a will (a), or a clause containing legacies (b) or appointing executors (c), does not necessarily revoke the rest of the will. Voluntary Revocation.
Partial destruction.

1138. A will is not destroyed by being struck through with a pen (d), even though done animo revocandi (e), for cancelling is not now one of the modes of revocation (f). Cancelling.

1139. Declarations by the testator that he had destroyed his will are not admissible to prove the fact of destruction, but they are admissible to prove his intention to revoke it, from which the fact of destruction may be inferred (g). Evidence of revocation.

1140. Where a will is found destroyed or mutilated, in a place in which the testator would naturally put it, the presumption is that the testator destroyed it, and that the destruction was done animo revocandi (h), and if there is a codicil, after the execution of the codicil (i); but this presumption is only prima facie and may be Presumption of intention.

 Revocation.

rebutted (k). Similarly, if a will was last traced to the possession of the testator and is not forthcoming at his decease (k), there is a prima facie presumption, in the absence of circumstances tending to a contrary conclusion, that the testator destroyed it animo revocandi (l). This does not, however, involve a presumed intention to revoke duly executed codicils to such will which are forthcoming at the testator's death, even though such codicils contain references to the will (m) and the will is known to have been destroyed by the testator (n); and the presumption may be rebutted by evidence, which, however, must be clear and satisfactory (o). Recent declarations by a testator of satisfaction at having settled his affairs (p) or of good-will towards the persons benefited by the will, or of adherence to the will and to the contents of the will itself (q), may be used for this purpose. A declaration by the testator of adherence to a will may be answered by his declarations to a contrary effect (r). The presumption may, it seems, also be rebutted by a consideration of the contents of the will itself (s), or by showing that the testator had no opportunity of destroying the will, or that it had been lost or destroyed without his privity or consent (t).

 proof.

1141. Where there is proof that the will was duly executed by a testator who afterwards became insane, and it is mutilated or not forthcoming, the burden of showing that it had been mutilated or destroyed by the testator when of sound mind is on the party alleging revocation (a).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Conditional Revocation.

Conditional revocation in general.

1142. Revocation by destruction, or obliteration, or by subsequent will or codicil, may be conditional, and if the condition in question is unfulfilled the revocation fails and the will, as made before such revocation, remains operative.

In all cases of revocation by destruction or obliteration, the question whether revocation is conditional is a question of fact (b), to be considered in connexion with the circumstances in which revocation occurred and the declarations of the testator with which it may have been accompanied (c), which are accordingly admissible in evidence (d).

Voluntary Revocation.

In cases, however, of revocation by subsequent will or codicil, the question is a question of construction (e); revocation is not conditional unless it appears to be such on the face of the subsequent will or codicil (f). The circumstances of the case must be considered (g), but extrinsic evidence of the testator's intention to make the revocation conditionally is inadmissible (h).

Revocation
by subsequent will or codicil.

1143. In particular, revocation may be relative to another disposition which has already been made or is intended to be made, and so dependent thereon that revocation is not intended unless that other disposition takes effect (i). Such a revocation is known as a dependent relative revocation, and if from any cause (k) the other disposition fails to take effect, the will remains operative as it was before the revocation (l).

Dependent relative
revocation.

The question may thus arise in the case of destruction of a will as part of the act of making a fresh will, which is not in fact

(d) Questions of the kind in the High Court of Justice come before the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division; as to such evidence in ambiguous cases in a Court of Probate, see pp. 511, 571, ante. An act of revocation by the means mentioned in the text is an equivocal act; see Burtenshaw v. Gilbert (1774), 1 Cowp. 49, per Lord MANSFIELD, C.J., at p. 52; Powell v. Powell supra.

(f) Thus, where another donee is substituted, the revoked disposition is not set up by the fact that that donee fails to come into existence (Nevill v. Boddam (1860), 28 Beav. 554, 558) or has not the capacity to take a benefit, as in the case of a devise to a charity before the passing of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73), s. 5 (French's Case (1587), 1 Roll. Tupper supra*, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 669) that there is a distinction, and the principle is not applied, where the substituted gift fails because of the want of capacity of the substituted donee, is founded on the cases of express revocation by subsequent will or codicil, in which the question what was the intention of the testator (see Quinn v. Butler supra, at pp. 227, 228), is a matter of construction; see the text, supra.

(l) In such a case "the animus revocandi has only a conditional existence; the condition being the validity of the disposition intended to be substituted" (Powell v. Powell supra, per Sir J. P. WILDE, at p. 212).

In all these and other cases, however, the question is whether the disposition revoked is intended not to operate whatever happens, or is only to be destroyed if the provisions of the substituted instrument operate in its stead (t). The court must be satisfied that the testator did not intend to revoke the original will except conditionally, in so far as the other disposition could be set up (u).

Voluntary
Revocation.

SECT. 3.—Revival.

1145. The only mode in which a revoked will or codicil can be revived since the 31st December, 1837 (b), is either by re-execution (c) or by a codicil duly executed showing an intention to revive it; and where a will has been first partly revoked and afterwards wholly revoked, a codicil reviving the will does not extend to so much as was partially revoked unless an intention to the contrary is shown (d). Modes of revival.

For the purpose of reviving a will no precise form of words is necessary, nor need the reviving instrument be annexed to or indorsed on the will (e). Form 1146. The testator's intention must be expressed, not implied (f); and consequently a codicil, to revive a will, must show an intention to do so. This intention must appear on the face of the codicil, either expressly or by a disposition of the testator's property inconsistent with any other intention (g). A codicil may revive in its altered state a will, or a previous codicil, to which unattested additions have been made (h). A will or codicil, though not revived, or part of a revoked will may be given validity by incorporation in a valid testamentary disposition (i). Express intention.

Revival.

codicils, is taken to be confirmed (k) unless a contrary intention appears (l), and the mere fact that a testator describes his will by reference to its original date does not exclude the inference that the will thus referred to is the will as modified by a previous codicil; but in order to set up an invalid codicil there must be a distinct reference to it (m).

Reference to will by date.

If a codicil refers by date to an existing will, and refers to some of its terms (n), or expressly confirms it (o), that is evidence of an intention to revive and reinstate the will even though the codicil itself is contingent (p) and the contingency may not have happened at the death of the testator (q). There must, however, be a distinct intention expressed in the codicil to revive the former will (r), and mere physical annexation of a codicil to a revoked will (s) or a mere reference by recital to such will by date is not sufficient to revive it (t).

Though a reference simply to the date of an earlier document is not sufficient to restrict the confirmation to a particular document, yet other words and surrounding circumstances may convey such an intention (a).

reference.

A codicil has been held to revive a revoked will although the reference, by date, to the revived will was inserted by mistake, where it was proved that it was not a mere mistake as to the date, but that the mind of the draftsman (which must be treated as that of the testator) was actually applied to the provisions of the wrong document (b). Intrinsic evidence may show that the reference by date was made erroneously (c), but parol evidence for this purpose is inadmissible (d).

SECT. 3.
Revival.

1148. Where an earlier will is revoked by a later will, and the earlier will is destroyed, and a subsequent codicil purports to revive the earlier will, the question whether the later will is revoked by the codicil depends on whether or not the codicil contains dispositions inconsistent with the later will (e). If it does the later will is revoked (f), otherwise not. The mere fact that a codicil is described as a codicil to an earlier will does not impliedly revoke a later one (f), but in the circumstances may have that effect (g). On the other hand, the revival of a will expressly revoking all other wills does not necessarily revoke an intermediate codicil; and parol evidence is admissible to show quo animo the revival was made (h).

codicil.

1149. A will actually destroyed cannot be revived, since no reference to a non-existent will can give it any vitality (i).

Destroyed
will.

SECT. 4.—Republication.

1150. The distinction between revival and republication is that the former restores a revoked will or codicil, while the latter merely confirms an unrevoked testamentary instrument so as to make it operate as if executed on the date of republication (k).

Republication
defined.

1151. Republication may be either express or constructive (l). The former takes place when a testator re-executes his will, with the (k) As to the effect of republication of a will in various cases before the 1st January, 1837, see 8 Bac. Abr., tit. Wills and Testaments (D.) 3, 7th ed., pp. 456 et seq. Except that republication of a will by a codicil may validate a gift in the will to an attesting witness (see p. 556, ante), republication as distinct from revival has now little practical effect. It was of course of importance in enabling testators to obtain the benefit of the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), by re-publishing their wills made before that date; see Brooke v. Kent (1840), 3 Moo. P. C. C. 334; Andrews v. Turner (1842), 3 Q. B. 177; Doe d. York v. Walker (1844), 12 M. & W. 591; Winter v. Winter (1846), 5 Haro. 306.

Republica-

necessary formalities (m), for the express purpose of republishing it. Constructive republication occurs when a testator makes a codicil to his will or some testamentary instrument from which the inference can be drawn that he wishes it to be read as part of his will. No precise form of words is necessary (n), nor need the codicil expressly republish the will (o). Thus, if the instrument is described as "a codicil to my will" (p), or if the codicil is written on the same paper as the will and refers to "my executors above named," it operates as a republication of the will (q).

A reference sufficient to revive a revoked instrument is sufficient to republish an earlier unrevoked instrument so as to shift its date, but the converse does not hold, for a codicil described as a codicil to a will republishes it, though it may not revive the will if it has been revoked (r).

republication.

1152. The effect of republishing a will is for many purposes to shift its date to the date of the republishing instrument (s), as if the testator at that date had made a will in the words of the will so republished (t). Republication does not, however, necessarily make the will operate for all purposes as if it had originally been made at the date of the republishing instrument; a contrary intention may be shown (u).

legacies.

The rule is subject to the limitation that the intention of the testator is not to be defeated thereby (a); and republication does not revive a legacy which has been revoked, adeemed, or satisfied (b) in (m) See pp. 547 et seq., 552 et seq., ante. In the absence of intention, however, re-execution need not amount to republication (Dunn v. Dunn (1866), L. R. 1 P. & D. 277).

The republication of a will does not necessarily revoke any intermediate will or codicil (e).

SECT. 4
Republica-
tion*

Effect on intermediate wills.

Part IX.—Codicils.

1153. A codicil (f) takes effect as annexed to a will (g); the will and all the codicils thereto are construed together as one testamentary disposition (h), though not as one document (i), and the same principles in general apply to the construction of a codicil as of a will (k). Thus, for the purpose of explaining the will or any codicil, the court may and is bound to look at the will and at all the other codicils (l). The court may, for example, look at a recital of a will contained in a codicil, and may alter the construction of the will by it (m) if the recital is not obviously erroneous (n). Dispositions by a prior will or codicil are not affected by a later will or codicil further than is necessary to give effect to the intentions of the testator shown by the will and codicils taken as a whole (o).

Pratt* (1844), 14 Sim. 129). PART IX.

Codicils.

Confirmation of will by codicil.

1154. The effect of a confirmation of the will (p), by a subsequent codicil is for many purposes (q), subject to any contrary intention being shown (r), and without prejudice to the original effect of the will and intermediate codicils (s), to bring the dispositions of the will down to the date of the codicil and to effect the same disposition of the testator's estate as if the testator had at that date made a new will containing the same dispositions as the original will, but with the alterations introduced by the various codicils (t), except such codicils as are inoperative without being themselves expressly confirmed or incorporated (u), or are expressly or impliedly revoked (w). Particularly, generic (x) descriptions of property are prima facie

Seymour (1872), 6 I. R. C. L. 219, 343, 344, Ex. Ch. As to revocation by subsequent will or codicil, see pp. 565 et seq., ante.

(p) Such confirmation amounts for this purpose to republication of the will; see Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 34; and p. 578, ante. As to the express mention of the will only, or the will and some only of the previous codicils, see p. 579, ante. The confirmation does not, however, operate as a re-execution of the will, so as to make the will itself, as an instrument of a certain date, bear the date of the codicil (Re Elcom, Layborn v. Grover-Wright, [1894] 1 Ch. 303 (will made before Married Women's Reversionary Interests Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 57), and codicil made after that Act); Re Moore, Long v. Moore, [1907] 1 I. R. 315 (confirmation within three months of death did not invalidate charitable devise); but see A.-G. v. Hearbrell (1761), Amb. 451).

As to the effect of unattested alterations to a will, see p. 561, ante; as to the effect of a confirming codicil incorporating documents not in existence at the date of a will, but referred to in the will as if in existence, and actually so at the date of the codicil, see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 159; In the Goods of Rendle (1899), 68 L. Winter* (1846), 5 Hare, 306, in which cases the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 34, was rendered applicable by a codicil made after the Act. Confirmation of a will attested by a legatee or his wife, by a codicil not subject to the objection, renders his legacy valid; see p. 556, ante. As to the exercise of a special power conferred after the date of the will, see Cowper v. Mantell (No. 1) (1856), 22 Beav. 223, 230, where the power was held not executed; and as to a power already conferred, but exercisable on an event after the date of the will, *Re Blackburn, Smiles v. (s) The rule "does not mean that you are to read the will in any way different from the mode in which it would have been read if the testator had died the moment after he had executed it . . . you do republish it so as to make it operate from that other later time, and if there be any legal effect that is brought to operate by what has taken place in the meantime you have the benefit of that" (*Stilwell v. (x) That is to say, not identifying any specific thing and that only, but describing a class of objects capable of increase or diminution; see p. 692, post. Where the description identifies a specific thing, the confirmation referred not to the date of the will (y), but to the date of the codicil (a), so as to pass all the testator's interest (b) in the property then so described (c), unless the gift in the meantime lapses (d), or is revoked (e), or, under the presumptions against double portions, is adeemed or satisfied (f); but such confirmation, it seems, need not affect the conditions of a gift (g), or the donee where the description may apply to different persons at different times (h).

by codicil has no effect in altering a description or substituting a new subject-matter where the original subject-matter is adeemed (Sidney v. Sidney (1873), L. R. 17 Eq. 65).

(y) It is assumed that the rule of construction in the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 24, referring descriptions of property to the death of the testator (see p. 691, post), is excluded, or is otherwise not applicable.

Fraser*, [1904] 1 Ch. 726, 734, C. A.; see, however, Re Edwards, Rowland v. Edwards (1890), 63 L. T. 481.

(b) As, for instance, the purchase-money of property which since the date of the will became subject to an option to purchase (Emuss v. Smith (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 722; Re Pyle, Pyle v. Pyle, [1895] 1 Ch. 724; Steele v. Steele, [1913] 1 F. R. 292, C. A.).

(c) Thus, under a general devise of lands in a will, lands purchased subsequently to the date of the will and before the date of the confirming codicil pass (Acherley v. Vernon (1726), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 85; Goodlittle d. Woodhouse v. Meredith (1813), 2 M. & S. 5; Hulme v. Heygate (1816), 1 Mer. 285; compare note (q), p. 517, ante; Doe d. York v. Walker, supra; and see note (t), p. 580, ante). The principle of falsa demonstratio was not applied in Pattison v. Pattison (1832), 1 My. & K. 12; Macdonald v. Irwin (1878), 8 Ch. D. 101, 108, C. A., where the descriptions were accurate at the date of the will, and the legacies were adeemed.

(f) The codicil, therefore, does not revive a legacy already adeemed or satisfied by a portion (Izard v. Hurst (1698), 1 reem. (Ch.) 224; Drinkwater v. Falconer (1755), 2 Ves. Sen. 623, 626; Monck v. Monck (Lord) (1810), 1 Ball & B. 298; Booker v. Allen (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 270; Powys v. Mansfield (1837), 3 My. & Cr. 359, 376; Montague v. Montague (1852), 15 Beav. 565; Cowper v. Mantell (No. 1) (1856), 22 Beav. 223; Hopwood v. Hopwood (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 728; Sidney v. Sidney (1873), L. R. 17 Eq. 65. But if it is doubtful whether the doctrine of ademption is to be applied, the fact of there being a codicil is important (Re Aynsley, Kyrle v. Turner (1914), 30 T. L. R. 664).

(g) Stibrell v. Mellersh (1851), 20 L. J. (Ch.) 356 (hotchpot of advances which testator had "already" made; advance made after date of will was held not affected; see p. 582, post); Re Park, Bott v. Chester, [1910] 2 Ch. 322, 327, 328 (condition as to marriage with consent); but see Re Rayer, Rayer v. Rayer, [1903] 1 Ch. 685 (direction that annuities were to be free of deduction except legacy duty and income tax; held that effect of confirmation was that annuitants bore duties substituted for legacy duty by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), passed before the codicil); Wedgwood v. Denton (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 290 (condition relating to residence during specified lease; renewal of lease before confirmation); Re Taylor, Dale v. Dale, [1909] W. N. 69 (effect on gift over to issue of deceased children). A confirmation by codicil does not give any effect to a condition shown to be dispensed with (see p. 691, post) by the testator before the date of the codicil (Violet v. Brockman (1857), 26 L. J. (Ch.) 308; compare Cooper v. Cooper (1856), 6 L. Ch. R. 217, 223; see also Re Dayrell, Hastie v. Dayrell, [1904] 2 Ch. 496).

Codicils.

Revocation
by codicil of share of residue.

The codicil has no such effect where it is executed for a limited purpose only, and does not purport to confirm the will or bring its terms down to the date of the codicil (i). The date of original execution of the will remains as a factor for determining the construction, for example, when it is necessary to determine the date to which expressions of time occurring in the will are referable (k).

If by a will a residuary estate is given to a number of persons as individuals and not as a class (l), and as tenants in common, and by a codicil the share of one of such persons is revoked, then that share devolves as on the testator's intestacy (m), unless it is otherwise disposed of (n). The intention that the others of the named persons should take may be shown by a direction that that share should fall into residue (o) or by other means (p), including, it appears, the mere confirmation of the will in other respects (q). If the named

The contrary, however, was held in Perkins v. Micklethwaite (1715), 1 P. Wms. 274, 275 (to "youngest son J.": J. died in life of testator, but another son J. was born afterwards before the codicil and was held to take); and in Re Donald, Moore v. Somerset (1909), 53 Sol. Jo. 673 ("to whom I have given legacies," applied to legatees by codicil). WARRINGTON, J., saw no distinction between references to the subject-matter and to objects of a gift in this respect, and declined to follow Anon., supra, which case, however, was treated as the only authority.

to the interest given to the donee (i), or repugnant to other gifts in the will (a), or otherwise illegal (b); or it may be void as a matter of construction by being inconsistent with the rest of the will (c) or too uncertain for the court to ascertain its meaning (d); or it may fail to take effect because the court declines to investigate whether CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 394 et seq. A similarity between wills and contracts in this respect was suggested in Cooke v. Turner (1846), 15 M. & W. 727, per ROLFE, B., at p. 735: "a proviso good by way of contract must also be good by way of condition"; and in Egerlon v. Brownlow (Earl) (1853), 4 H. L. Cas. 1, per POLLOCK, C.B., at p. 150. For examples of gifts held not to be contrary to public policy, see Re Dickson's Trust (1850), 1 Sim. (N. s.) 37 (in case daughter became a nun); Cooke v. Turner, supra, and Evanturel v. Evanturel (1874), L. R. 6 P. C. 1, 29 (condition against disputing the will or disputing legitimacy); Hodgson v. Halford (1879), 11 Ch. D. 959 (forfeiture on marrying a Christian, or forsaking Jewish religion); Wainwright v. Miller, [1897] 2 Ch. 255 (if not a Roman Catholic).

(i) As to repugnant conditions, see title GIFTS, Vol. XV., p. 422.

(a) A gift over is bad which defeats or abridges an estate in fee by altering the course of its devolution, and is to take effect at the moment of devolution and at no other time, or which is to defeat an estate and to take effect on the exercise of any of the rights incident to that estate (Shaw v. Ford (1877), 7 Ch. D. 669, per FRY, J., at pp. 673, 674). Thus a gift over cannot be made to defeat a prior gift on alienation by the prior donee (see title GIFTS, Vol. XV., p. 422; as to gifts of life interests determinable (by way of limitation and not of condition) on alienation, see title SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., pp. 570 et seq.); or on partition between two or more prior donees (Shaw v. Ford, supra); or on non-alienation (ibid.; Re Beeston v. Beeston, Beeston v. Hall (1907), 122 L. T. Jo. 367, such as intestacy (see title GIFTS, Vol. XV., p. 422); or on escheat (Midway v. Midway (1602), Moore (K. B.), 632, 633; Carte v. Carte (1745), 3 Atk. 174, 180); or on forfeiture to the Crown (Re Wilcocks' Settlement (1875), 1 Ch. D. 229).

(b) See title GIFTS, Vol. XV., p. 424. A condition amounting to a trust is also subject to the restriction that the object for whose benefit the trust is imposed must be capable of taking; see p. 536, ante; and title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES, p. 25, ante. It does not appear that there is a like restriction where the condition does not amount to a trust, but binds the donee to do acts which may benefit such an object incapable of taking; see Lloyd v. Lloyd (1852), 2 Sim. (N. s.) 255 (repair of a tomb); Roche v. McDermott, [1901] 1 L. R. 394 (donee to give executors bond for repair of tomb); it was suggested, however, that the condition was unenforceable; and compare Goodman v. Sallash Corporation (1882), 7 App. Cas. 633.

(c) As to inconsistency, see p. 674, post.

(d) Fillingham v. Bromley (1823), Turn. & R. 530 ("live and reside"; but see Dunne v. Dunne (1856), 7 De G. M. & G. 207 ("dwell and reside"); Wynne v. Fletcher (1857), 24 Beav. 430 ("usual place of abode"); Cluversing v. Ellison (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 707 (being "educated abroad"); Duddy v. Gresham (1878), 2 L. R. Ir. 442, C. A. (retire to a convent etc.); Re Exmouth (Viscount), Exmouth (Viscount) v. Praed (1883), 23 Ch. D. 158; Jeffreys v. Jeffreys (1901), 84 L. T. 417 (not to associate, correspond with, or visit certain persons); Re Gassiot, Brougham v. Rose-Gassiot (1907), 51 Sol. Jo. 570 (as to taking name); Re Sandbrook, Noel v. Sandbrook, [1912] 2 Ch. 471. For examples of conditions held to be not uncertain, but such as the court enforces, see Tattersall v. Howell (1816), 2 Mer. 26 (donee to give up low company etc.); Maud v. Maud (1860), 27 Beav. 615 ("should she follow the paths of virtue" etc.); Evanturel v. Evanturel, supra (not to dispute will); Re Moore's Trusts, Lewis v. Moore (1906), 96 L. T. 44 (donee to marry person of ample fortune to maintain her in comfort and affluence). A gift to trustees upon trust, for a person if he behaves well, and to their satisfaction, may sometimes be construed as giving them only a discretion to deprive him of the gift as a condition subsequent (see Kingsman v. Kingsman (1706), 2 Vern. 559; Re Coe's Trusts (1902), 4 K. & J. 100).

it has been or will be complied with (e), or because the donee has a right to take the gift and disregard the condition (f), or because the donee is excused in the circumstances from performance of the condition (g).

Conditions.

1157. A condition, according to the construction of the will (h), is either a condition precedent, that is to say such that there is no gift intended at all unless and until the condition is fulfilled (i), or a condition subsequent, that is to say such that the condition is intended to put an end to the gift (l), or to prevent the gift from ever taking effect (l).

Conditions precedent and subsequent.

1158. Where an interest is contingent on any event, it is in effect a condition precedent to the gift that such event should happen. A vested or contingent interest may be subject to be divested on any specified event; the gift is then in effect subject to a condition subsequent (m).

Vested and contingent interests.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Validity in Certain Cases.

1159. Conditions against public policy are those conditions as to which the State has or may have an interest that they should remain unperformed or unfulfilled (n). The determination of what is contrary to public policy varies from time to time (o).

Public policy.

Examples of conditions void as contrary to public policy are conditions inciting the donee to commit a crime (p), to use corruption (q) or to do any act prohibited by law (r); or inciting the donee to exert private or political party influence in any matter or act of state (s), such as obtaining a title of honour (t); or tending to produce a future separation of an unseparated husband and wife (a); forbidding the service of the donee in the defence of the realm (b); or forbidding the performance by him of any other public duty (c); or unreasonably (d) restraining marriage (e), trade (f) or industry (g); or any other conditions tending to such results (h).

restraint of

1160. With regard to gifts of real estate or of legacies charged on real estate, the intention to restrain marriage is not shown merely by a proviso defeating a previous gift on the marriage of the donee (i); but with regard to legacies payable out of personal estate (k), with or without the proceeds of sale of real estate directed to be converted (l), such a proviso does show that intention and is accordingly void.

Subject to the doctrine with regard to conditions in terrorem (m), conditions which are in partial restraint of marriage, and such that the restraint is reasonable in the circumstances (n), are valid; such are conditions against marrying a particular person (o), or a member of a particular class of persons (p), or a person of a particular religion (q); or forbidding marriage under a specified and reasonable age (r); or forbidding marriage without consent of some person at any age (s); or forbidding the remarriage of a widow (t) or a widower (a); or, it seems, prescribing the ceremonies and place of a marriage (b). Further, an interest may be given conditionally on the donee marrying a particular person (c) or one of a class of persons (d).

Conditions.

Limitations depending on marriage.

Conditions
voidable by the donee.

Conditions
in terrorem.

These considerations as to marriage apply only to conditions, and not to words merely describing the interest created(e). An interest may be given to endure so long as the donee remains unmarried(f), and generally marriage may be made the ground of a gift ceasing or commencing(g).

1161. A condition may be ineffectual against the donee. Thus, where there is a direction that a donee is not to enjoy a vested gift in full until he attains a particular age, then unless there is in the will or some codicil to it a clear indication of intention not only that the donee is not to have the enjoyment of the gift until attaining that age, but that some other person is to have that enjoyment, or unless the property is so clearly taken away from the donee up to the time of attaining that age as to induce the court to hold that as to the previous income there is an intestacy, the court on the application of the donee, if he is entitled to give a discharge for the gift, or the persons deriving title under him, will strike that direction out of the will(h).

1162. Certain conditions, if attached to a legacy of specific personal estate, or a legacy charged on personal estate only(i), may be void against the donee as made in terrorem, that is to say, as a mere idle threat to induce the donee to comply with the condition, but not to affect the bequest(k), unless the testator shows that his intention was not merely to threaten or enjoin the donee by the condition(l), but to make a different disposition of the subject of the gift in the event of non-compliance with the condition. The

(e) The question in each case is whether the words constitute a limitation or a condition (Heath v. Lewis (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 954, 957; Re King's Trusts (1892), 29 L. R. Ir. 401, 408; Re Moore, Trafford v. Maconochie (1888), 39 Ch. D. 116, 129, 132, C. A.).

Hendy*, [1913] Victorian Law Reports, 559.

(i) The rule was derived from the civil law, as administered by the ecclesiastical courts, and adopted by the courts of equity with modifications; see Bellairs v. Bellairs (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 510, 515, 516, where the analogy with the rules as to vesting (see p. 810, post) is pointed out; Re Whiting's Settlement, Whiting v. De Rutzen, [1905] 1 Ch. 96, C. A., per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at p. 115. In case of a mixed gift of real and personal estate, without any trust for conversion, or in case of a legacy charged on such a mixed fund, different rules are applied according to the property concerned (Reynish v. Martin (1746), 3 Atk. 330, 335; Duddy v. Gresham (1878), 2 L. R. Ir. 442, C. A., per BALL, L.C., at p. 458; but see ibid., per CHRISTIAN, L.J., at pp. 466, 467, apparently followed in Re Pettifer, Pettifer v. Pettifer, [1900] W. N. 182).

(k) Re Dickson's Trust (1850), 1 Sim. (N. S.) 37, 43; Duddy v. Gresham, supra, at p. 464 ("a mere threat, that the legatee was at liberty to disregard").

(l) As to how far the application of the rule depends on construction in this respect, see Harvey v. Aston (1737), 1 Atk. 361, per WILLES, C.J., at pp. 377, 378; Bellairs v. Bellairs, supra, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 516.

conditions to which this doctrine is ordinarily applied (m) are conditions requiring a consent to the marriage of the donee (n) or forbidding the donee to dispute the will (o). § 2.
Conditions.

In cases where such a condition is a condition subsequent, a gift over on non-compliance with the condition is essential to (p) and sufficient for (q) the validity of the condition. Such a gift over may be made by a direction that on such non-compliance the gift is to fall into residue (r), but not by a mere residuary gift without more (s), nor by a separate provision for the donee on non-compliance with the condition (t). Validity of such conditions where subsequent.

In cases where such a condition is a condition precedent, the testator may show that the condition is not in terrorem by a gift over on non-compliance with the condition (a) or a mere residuary bequest (b), or by providing for the donee in both events, whether Validity of such conditions where precedent.

(m) Conditions in general restraint of marriage were considered as subject to this rule in Marples v. Bainbridge (1816), 1 Madd. 590, and Bellairs v. Bellairs (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 510; but in this respect there is the general ground of public policy on which these decisions ought to be based; see the criticism in Duddy v. Gresham (1878), 2 L. R. Ir. 442, C. A. per CHRISTIAN, L.J., at p. 468. A gift over does not render valid a condition in general restraint of marriage (Morley v. Kennoldson, Morley v. Linkson (1843), 2 Hare, 570; Lloyd v. Lloyd (1852), 2 Sim. (N. S.) 255). In Re Dickson's Trust (1850), 1 Sim. (N. S.) 37, 43, 45, the rule was explained as based on public policy; conditions against alienation of a life estate were there said to be void as in terrorem unless there was a gift over, but the case is not now accepted as laying down the true rule as to such conditions (Rochford v. Hackman (1852), 1 Hare, 475, 481). It appears, at all events, that the doctrine does not ordinarily apply to other conditions not contravening any rule of public policy (Re Dickson's Trust, supra (forfeiture if donee became a nun)), and such other conditions do not become in terrorem, or otherwise invalid, by the mere want of a gift over (ibid., at p. 43; Re Catt's Trust (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 46, 52). On the construction of particular wills, however, other conditions may be construed as inducements or threats addressed to the donee personally, and as not affecting the gift, if the context requires it; see Byng v. Stratford (Lord) (1843), 5 Beav. 558, 571, 572, affirmed, sub nom. Hoare v. Byng (1844), 10 Cl. & Fin. 508, H. L.; *Re Meagher, Trustees, Executors and Agency Co., Ltd. v. Impossible conditions.

Effect of impossibility.

the condition is performed or not (c). If property is given on marriage with consent as a condition precedent, and the condition is in terrorem, the gift takes effect on marriage even without consent (d), but not until marriage (e).

This doctrine as to conditions in terrorem does not apply to devises of real estate (f), or to bequests of legacies charged on real estate (g), or charged on personally directed to be laid out in the purchase of real estate (h).

1163. A condition may be one which is intended to be performed in a presumed state of facts which do not or cannot exist; according to the intention shown the condition then either operates conditionally on that state of facts existing, and therefore, in the circumstances, does not take effect at all (i), or else operates in any event, but is impossible to perform (k).

If a condition, intended to be operative in any event, is precedent, and is originally impossible to perform, or is possible of performance at the date of the will, but afterwards becomes impossible by the act of God or circumstances over which neither the donee nor the testator had any control (l), the performance of the condition is not excused, and accordingly the gift does not vest (a);

where, however, the condition is subsequent in such a case, the gift takes effect free from the condition (b). The impossibility in these cases must be in the nature of things (c); a condition is not void merely because its performance is highly improbable (d), or because it is out of the power of the donee, or even out of any human power (e), to ensure its performance.

Conditions.

1164. In general, if a condition is void as contrary to public policy, repugnant to a prior gift, illegal, or uncertain, the effect on the gift is that if the condition is precedent the gift fails (f), and that if the condition is subsequent the gift takes effect free from the condition (g).

Effect of

If a condition is voidable and avoided by the donee, or repugnant to the gift to which it is attached, or fails to operate on the gift as being in terrorem or otherwise, then the gift takes effect free from the condition, whether the condition is precedent or subsequent (h).

1165. The donee may not be bound by (i) a condition imposed by the will on account of the acts of the testator or other events, subsequent to the date of the will, where the effect is that, substantially, the condition is performed or nullified in the testator's lifetime, or that, substantially, the testator has dispensed with the condition or has put performance out of the power of the donee (k).

In Brown v. Peck (1758), 1 Eden, 140; Wren v. Bradley (1848), 2 Do G. & Sm. 49, the court applied to conditions precedent the rule of the civil law that a condition contra bonos mores should be treated as non scriptum; but these cases were explained otherwise, as based on a construction treating the conditions in question as subsequent, in Re Moore, Trafford v. Maconochie (1888), 39 Ch. D. 116, 124, 126, 130, C. A.

(h) As to conditions in terrorem, see pp. 588 et seq., ante. A rule said to be the civil law rule drew a distinction between illegal conditions involving malum in se and those involving malum prohibitum; in the latter cases the gift took effect free from the condition; see Re Moore, Trafford v. Maconochie, supra, at p. 128, where such rule, if any such exists, was held not to apply to a limitation, and compare Co. Litt. 206 a.

Conditions.
 Other grounds of excuse.

1166. The donee may also be excused by the act of the court (l), or on grounds of public policy in some cases where the condition is subsequent, and where on account of the infancy or marriage (m) of the donee (n), or of his public duties, he is not free to perform the condition (o). But the donee is not excused by his own ignorance of the condition (p), at all events unless in the circumstances of the case there is a duty to give him notice thrown on a party interested (q), or unless he is the heir and the condition is a condition subsequent (a); or by his own acts rendering it impossible by testator accepting composition); Violet v. Brookman (1857), 5 W. R. 342 (condition against disputing father's will: acquiescence by testator in his lifetime in revaluation of father's estate); Walker v. Walker (1860), 2 De G. F. & J. 255 (condition requiring conveyance by donee: purchase by testator of donee's interest). As to a condition requiring a consent to marriage, see pp. 596 et seq., post. There are remarks in some cases suggesting that the true principle is not that of considering that the condition has been fulfilled, but that the donees are exempt from the condition altogether, so that the will must be read as if there were no condition (Re Park, Bott v. Chester, [1910] 2 Ch. 322, per PARKER, J., at p. 327), but this is doubtful; as to subsequent events, see p. 647, post.

(m) Thus, a married woman may be excused from a condition as to her residence, or as to her return to England, if she can only comply with the condition by separating from her husband (Woods v. Townley (1853), 11 Hare, 314; Wilkinson v. Wilkinson (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 604; compare p. 586, ante). As to performance by a married woman restrained from anticipation, see Robinson v. Wheeler (1856), 6 De G. M. & G. 535, C. A. (under the law before 1882, the court could not dispense with restraint); Conveyancing Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 7.

(n) As in the case of conditions subsequent requiring an act of volition, where the persons to whom his legal custody and care are committed do not choose that he should conform; an infant cannot, therefore, be said to refuse or neglect to reside at a place (Partridge v. Partridge, [1894] 1 Ch. 351, following Parry v. Roberts (1871), 19 W. R. 1000); or to refuse or neglect to take a name and arms (Re Edwards, Lloyd v. Boyes, [1910] 1 Ch. 541): see note (c), p. 593, post.

(p) Such as conditions requiring a certain act to be done within a certain time, as claiming the legacy (Fry v. Porter (1670), 1 Mod. Rep. 300; Fry's (Lady Anne) Case (1672), 1 Vent. 199; Burgess v. Robinson (1817), 3 Mer. 7; Hawkes v. Baldwin (1838), 9 Sim. 355; Re Hodge's Legacy (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 92; *Powell v. (q) Fry's (Lady Anne) Case, supra, at p. 201 ("where one of the parties is more privy than the other, notice must be given"). The executor is under no obligation to disclose the condition, even in a case where he takes a benefit under it by way of gift over (Re Lewis, Lewis v. Lewis, [1904] 2 Ch. 656, C. A.; Chauncy v. Graydon (1743), 2 Atk. 616; but see Brillebank v. Goodwin (1868), L. R. 5 Eq. 545, 550; Re Mackay, Mackay v. Gould, [1906] 1 Ch. 25, 32, 33).

(a) The heir, if taking by descent under the law prior to the Inheritance Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106) (see title DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, Vol. XI. p. 8, note (1)), was not bound by a condition subsequent divesting his estate, unless and until he had notice of it (Doe d. Kenrick v. Beauclerk (1809), 11 East, 657, following Fraunces's Case (1600), 8 Co. Rep. 89 b, 92 a, Malloon v. Fitzgerald (1671), 3 Mod. Duke* (1765), Amb. 511, 513); and this rule has been applied in a case since that Act (Murnhu v. Bender (1874) 9 I. R. C. T. 123) - it does not apply.

for him to perform the condition (b); or, except as mentioned above, by his infancy or other disability (c).

SECT. 2.
Conditions.

SECT. 3.—Performance of Conditions.

1167. In many cases, particularly with regard to conditions requiring a consent to marriage, the court may hold a condition satisfied where it has been complied with substantially (d), though not in terms (e), whether the condition is precedent or

however, to conditions precedent (Murphy v. Broder (1874), 9 L. R. C. 11, 123, 127; Horrigan v. Horrigan, [1904] 1 L. R. 29; and see Simpson v. Vickers (1807), 14 Ves. 341). There does not appear to be any such rule in favour of next of kin; and the rule in favour of the heir may be now obsolete in England owing to the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), as to cases within that Act where the title of the heir is subject to that of the testator's representative.

(b) Philips v. Walter (1720), 2 Bro. Parl. Cas. 250; Carter v. Carter (1857), 3 K. & J. 617, 651, disapproved, but on other grounds, in Pilcher v. Rawlins (1872), 7 Ch. App. 259; Middleton v. Windbross (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 212 (settlement by donee, with testator's approval).

(c) Fry's (Lady Anne) Case (1672), 1 Vent. 199, 200. Thus, an infant (except as mentioned in note (n), p. 592, ante) is bound by a condition, e.g., as to taking a name and arms (Whittingham's Case (1603), 8 Co. Rep. 42 b, 44 b; Bevan v. Mahon-Hagan (1892), 27 L. R. Ir. 399; and see Doe d. Luscombe v. Yates (1815), 5 B. & Ald. 544 (condition held substantially complied with by infant); Ledward v. Hassells (1856), 2 K. & J. 370 (condition as to giving a discharge)). As to performance by or on behalf of a lunatic, see Re Setton (Earl), [1898] 2 Ch. 378, C. A.; Re Crumpe, Orpen v. Moriarty, [1912] 1 L. R. 485.

(d) As to whether a condition has been substantially fulfilled, generally, Mohun (Lord) v. Hamilton (Duke) (1704), 2 Bro. Parl. Cas. 239 (giving no trouble to executor); Fazakerley v. Ford (1831), 4 Sim. 390 (shifting clause on succession to estates; succession to estates subject to incumbrance, not within it); Scarlett v. Abinger (Lord) (1865), 34 Beav. 338 (condition for settlement of the donee's own estates); Re Moir, Warner v. Moir (1884), 25 Ch. D. 605; Re Sax, Barnard v. Sax (1893), 68 L. T. 849 ("cease to carry on the business"; sale to company, donees serving as managing directors); Galwey v. Barden, [1899] 1 L. R. 508 (entering on a calling); Re Crumpe, Orpen v. Moriarty, supra (not returning to England); and compare Newburgh v. Newburgh (1715), 2 Bro. Parl. Cas. 247; Talk 47 Houlditch (1813), 1 Ves. & B. 248; Schnell v. Tyrrell (1834), 7 Sim. v. (remaining in England); Re Stone's Trusts (1866), 12 Jur. (N. S.) 486 (claim within time made by third person); Re Arab and Glass's Contract, [1891] 1 Ch. 601, C. A. (return to England; temporary visit sufficient); Browne v. Browne, [1912] 1 L. R. 272. Literal compliance may be necessary if the words of the will are clear and the condition is capable of being literally complied with (Caldwell v. Cresswell (1871), 6 Ch. App. 278). As to what is sufficient compliance with a name and arms clause, see titles NAME AND ARMS, CHANGE OF, Vol. XXI., pp. 349 et seq.; SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., pp. 697 et seq. As to what is sufficient compliance with a condition as to residence, see title SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., p. 696, note (t). A condition requiring the donee to claim the legacy may be sufficiently complied with by an order in an action for administration, even though the donee is not a party (Tollner v. Marriott (1830), 4 Sim. 19), but not, it seems, by a mere order on originating summons not asking for general administration (Re Hartley, Stedman v. Dunster (1887), 34 Ch. 11, 742). A condition requiring the donee to give a good discharge may similarly be sufficiently performed by bringing an action (Franco v. Alvarres (1746), 3 Atk. 342; Ledward v. Hassells, supra).

subsequent (f), but does not in general do so in case of conditions divesting an estate that has become vested (g).

There may be cases where, in the circumstances, an attempted or inchoate performance is sufficient (h), but this is not the general rule, even though the completion of the performance is prevented by the death of the donee or other act of God (i).

performance.

1168. Where the testator has prescribed a period within which a condition must be performed, this period must be strictly observed (k), subject to the jurisdiction, if any, of the court to grant relief from forfeiture (l). If, however, the testator has not prescribed such a period and the condition is one to be performed by the donee personally, not requiring the intervention or concurrence of any other person, the period for the performance of the condition is necessarily the life of the donee and no longer, and the condition is not complied with if the donee dies without having performed it (m). Where persons other than the donee are benefited, the period allowed is, as a rule, a reasonable period (n).

Sen. 314, and Supplement, 154; Randal v. Payne (1779), 1 Bro. C. C. 55; Fitzgerald v. Ryan, [1899] 2 I. R. 637, 652, 654; and see Beaumont v. Squire (1852), 17 Q. No one can take advantage of the non-performance of a condition who intentionally prevented the condition from being performed (g).

Conditions.

If a legacy is given on a valid condition subsequent that the donee does or abstains from doing any specified act, the court orders payment of the legacy to the donee, but requires security for the observance of the condition (r); if, on the other hand, the condition refers to no act or default of the donee, he may be entitled to payment without giving security (s). In each case, however, the court gives effect to the intentions of the testator, which may modify or exclude these rules (t).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Relief against Conditions.

1170. A court with equitable jurisdiction (a) may grant a donee relief against a condition precedent (b), or against forfeiture under a condition subsequent (c), in the case of any condition on the usual equitable grounds of such relief (d), as where performance has been prevented by the contrivance of the executors (e), or other persons interested (f), and by no fault of the donee (g), or where the condition is in the nature of a penalty (h); and also in the case of conditions relating to matters such as the payment of legacies or other sums (i) or the release of claims (k), where performance has not been made within the time required by the testator, but is capable of being adequately performed at any time, on compensation being made for the delay (l); the court, however, does not give relief even in such cases where there is a gift over (m) to any other than that person who would take by operation of law (n). Except in such cases, the court cannot give relief at all (a).

(t) Thus, the testator may expressly direct security to be given (see, for example, Roche v. M'Dermott, [1901] 1 L. R. 394; Re Lester, Burton v. Lester (1906), 7 State Reports, New South Wales, 58); and the fact that trustees have the legal estate and active duties in relation to the property may prevent the donee obtaining transfer (Pocock v. Polson (1900), 21 New South Wales Law Reports (Equity), 90).

(a) The jurisdiction of a court of law to hold a condition substantially performed did not exist in all cases in which there was the equitable jurisdiction to give relief against non-performance (Clarke v. Parker (1812), 19 Ves. 1, 21, 22).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Conditions as to Consent to Marriage.

Application to conditions as to consent to marriage.

1171. A condition, whether precedent or subsequent, referring to marriage with the consent of a named person is generally construed as operative only during the life of the named person (b). If, therefore, that person dies in the life of the testator, or before any marriage, the gift takes effect free from the condition in cases where the condition is subsequent (c). Where the gift vests at a specified age, the condition is construed as referring only to a marriage under that age (d). On the other hand, where the condition refers to marriage with a consent attached to a certain office, such as that of trustee or guardian, it may be operative at any time while a person holds or can be appointed to that office (e). The giving of consent in such cases is of a fiduciary nature (f), but the condition is then

(l) As, for instance, by way of interest.

(m) A mere clause of revocation, it appears, does not amount to a gift over for this purpose (Simpson v. Vickers, supra).

Cameron* (1807), 14 Ves. 389; Davidson v. Kook (1856), 22 Beav. 206; West v. West (1863), 4 Giff. 198. There is no such restriction where no age is expressly or impliedly specified (Lloyd v. Branton (1817), 3 Mer. 108).

(e) Re Brown's Will, Re Brown's Settlement (1881), 18 Ch. D. 61, C. A. (guardian who might be appointed by the court); and see Gardiner v. Slater (1858), 25 Beav. 509, per ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 511. In cases where the consent of executors or trustees is required, the consent of those who renounce is unnecessary (Worthington v. Evans (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 165; Boyce v. Corbally (1834), L. & G. temp. Plunk. 102; Ewens v. Addison (1858), 4 Jur. (N. S.) 1034, doubting Graydon v. Hicks (1739), 2 Atk. 16).

(f) All the trustees or persons holding the office must as a rule concur; a consent of a majority is not sufficient unless the testator expressly allows it (Clarke v. Parker, supra, at pp. 17, 22, dissenting from Harvey v. Aston (1737), 1 Atk. 361, 375). The court may interfere if the consent is withheld or refused by a trustee from a corrupt, vicious, or satisfied (g) by the testator's own unqualified (h) previous consent to (i) or subsequent approbation of (k) a marriage. The condition, therefore, does not, as a rule, apply to a donee who marries with the testator's consent and becomes a widow after the date of the will during the testator's life (l).

Conditions.

1172. The consent must be a free consent (m), not obtained by misconduct (n). A general consent (o), or a consent evidenced by conduct (p), or presumed from the circumstances (q), or a conditional consent where the condition attached is afterwards performed (r), or a subsequent approbation (s), may be considered as a substantial compliance with the condition, even in cases where a consent in writing is required by the will (a).

consent.

A consent given unconditionally cannot be withdrawn (b), except on grounds which affect the propriety of giving the consent (c).

SECT. 3.—Acceptance and Disclaimer by the Donee.

1173. If the donee accepts the gift, he takes it with all the benefits and burdens which are incident to it by law (d), unreasonable cause (Clarke v. Parker (1812), 19 Ves. 1, 18), and may give consent if a trustee refuses either to consent or dissent (Goldsmid v. Goldsmid (1815), 19 Ves. 368). As to the control of a trustee's discretion in general, see title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES, pp. 138 et seq., ante.

or which are validly attached to it by the testator, and in particular with the burden of all the conditions and obligations validly attached to it which are intended to be binding on him (e). Unless the conditions are such that only a trust or charge on the property is created (f), or that the donee is only entitled to the enjoyment of the gift during such period as the conditions are performed by him (g), the donee on accepting the gift is bound to observe and perform the conditions (h) as on an implied contract by him (i). Thus, where the condition requires him to do some act involving expense, he is, if he accepts the gift, personally liable for Reversionary Interest Society, Ltd.*, [1910] 2 Ch. 230, 233; Re M'Mahon, M'Mahon v. M'Mahon, [1901] 1 L. R. 489, C. A. The acceptance may also operate to bind the donee by way of estoppel in favour of third persons, as, for instance, persons to whom by the condition he is bound to give a release (Egg v. Devey (1847), 10 Beav. 444; and see Robertson v. Junkin (1896), 26 Canada Supreme Court Reports, 192, 195, 196).

that act being done (k), even though the gift is insufficient to enable him to do so without loss (l).

SECT. 3.
Acceptance
and Disclaimer
by the Donee

When

1174. In general, and subject to the terms of the will (m), acceptance may be made by or inferred from informal acts of conduct (n), especially if they amount to acts of ownership (o). The donee need not accept the gift (p), but unless by the will the duty of doing some act to show his election is put upon him (a), his acceptance of the gift is presumed and the property vests in him unless and until he disclaims (b).

1175. Disclaimer (c) may be made in the case of a person sui juris (d) by informal acts of conduct as well as by record or Disclaimer.

(k) As to the limits of the jurisdiction of the court to order the condition specifically to be performed, see Kinnersley v. Williamson (1870), 18 W. R. 1016; and title SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, Vol. XXVII, pp. 52, 53.

(m) Thus, the will may require some writing (Evans v. Stratford (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 142).

(n) Northumberland (Earl) v. Granby (Marquis) (1760), 1 Eden, 489, also reported sub nom. Northumberland (Earl) v. Aylerford (Earl), Amb. 540, affirmed sub nom. Northumberland (Duke) v. Egmont (Lord) (1768), Amb. 657; Doe d. Chidzey v. Harris (1847), 16 M. & W. 517, 524.

(o) Bence v. Gilpin (1868), L. R. 3 Exch. 76. Acts done by a donee merely to preserve the property and not amounting to acts of ownership need not amount to acceptance (A.-G. v. Andrew (1798), 3 Ves. 637; Stacey v. Elph (1833), 1 My. & K. 195).

(p) "A man cannot have an estate put into him in spite of his teeth" (Thompson v. Leach (1690), 2 Vent. 198, per VENTRIS, J. (who dissented from the rest of the court), at p. 206, approved S. C., 2 Salk. 618, H. L.; 4 Man. & Ry. (K. B.) 190, n.; Townson v. Tickell (1819), 3 B. & Ald. 31, 37).

A.; and see Ex Defoe (1882), 2 Ontario Reports, 623; see also title GIFTS, Vol. XV., p. 418. Acceptance is thus presumed for the purpose of the property vesting in the donee even if the donee had no knowledge of the will, but in that case, it appears, not for the purpose of his incurring liabilities (Houghton v. Bell (1892), 23 Canada Supreme Court Reports, 498, 508 (liability as trustee)).

(c) As to what constitutes a disclaimer, see Doe d. Wynt v. Stagg (1839), 5 Bing. (N. C.) 564; Doe d. Chidzey v. Harris, supra. As to disclaimer of the office and estate of trustee, see title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES, p. 83, ante. As to the effect of disclaimer of a particular estate in accelerating subsequent limitations, see pp. 605, 606, post. As to sale of land, on one executor disclaiming, see stat. (1529) 21 Hen. 8, c. 4; Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 2, as amended by the Conveyancing Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 12; and title SALE OF LAND, Vol. XXV., p. 378, note (e).

(d) The court may order disclaimer on behalf of a lunatic (Re Marriott (1800), 2 Mol. 516; compare title LUNATICS AND PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND, Vol. XIX., p. 448) or an infant (see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., pp. 75, 76). A married woman may now disclaim a legacy, given to her since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75) as a feme sole, even though restrained from anticipation (Re Wimperis, Wicken v. Wilson, [1914] 1 Ch. 502); as to her disclaimer of real estate, see ibid.; Real Property Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), s. 7.

deed (e), even if the gift confers a legal estate in real property (f). A disclaimer puts a donee, as regards his liabilities, burdens and rights, in the same position as if no gift had been made to him (g), but does not necessarily render the gift void in regard to all persons and for all purposes (h), as, for example, where the donee is a trustee (i).

1176. When two distinct properties are given to a donee, he is primâ facie entitled to take one and disclaim the other (k), even where the two are included under the same words of gift (l); his right to do so may be rebutted if the intention of the testator is shown that the two gifts should be taken together, or generally that the option to disclaim one of them should not exist (m). Where, however, there is a single and undivided gift of an aggregate property, such as a residuary estate, primâ facie the donee must either take the whole or none (n).

1177. A mere refusal by a life tenant to receive income, where there has been no change of position as regards the other persons claiming under the will and the refusal is made without consideration, may be retracted so far as regards future payments of income (o). Similarly, if the disclaimer is not of any estate in the

(e) A deed is sufficient (Townson v. Tickell (1819), 3 B. & Ald. 31; Rebie v. Crook (1835), 2 Bing. (N. C.) 70) and is advisable particularly in the case of a trustee; see title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES, p. 83, ante.

It appears that it is readily inferred that the donee is not entitled to disclaim where one gift is a leasehold known by the testator to be onerous and bequeathed so as to show that the remainder of the testator's estate was intended to be free from the burden (Talbot v. Radnor (Earl) (1834), 3 My. & K. 252, corrected and explained in Fairtlough v. Johnstone (1865), 16 I. Ch. R. 442; and see Re Sitwell, Worsley v. Sitwell (1913), 135 L. T. Jo. 323).

property, but only of the benefit under the will, accompanied by an assertion of a right by a higher and better title, the person disclaiming is not precluded from acting under his better judgment and taking the property as donee (p). As a rule, however, if the donee is sui juris (q), and the will itself does not provide otherwise, a gift once unequivocally disclaimed cannot be afterwards claimed (r), nor can a gift once unequivocally accepted (s) be afterwards repudiated (a) to the prejudice of others.

SECT. 3.
Acceptance
and Disclaimer
by the Donee.

SECT. 4.—Modes of Failure of a Gift.

1178. A gift may fail for reasons personal to the donee, as, for example, that the donee does not exist to benefit by the gift, and that the gift lapses (b). Further, the donee may disclaim the gift (c). The gift may also fail by reason of a title paramount to that of the donee, for example, that of the executors or administrators (d). Again, the property given to the testator may not be his own property, but the property of some other person (e).

1179. Acts of the testator prior to the date of the will may cause a gift to fail, in the sense that the gift takes effect not as a gift, but in entire or partial satisfaction of a liability undertaken by the testator prior to and existing at the date of the will. In certain cases a presumption arises as to the satisfaction, wholly or partially, by gifts in a will, of portions already covenanted to be paid, or of debts already owing to creditors at the date of the will, in which cases, unless the presumption is displaced by evidence or the contrary of the will, the portioner or creditor is bound to elect (f).

refusing to take possession of a leasehold on account of its burdensome nature is nevertheless entitled to the income of the proceeds of sale (Lonsdale (Earl) v. Bercholdt (Countess) (1857), 3 K. & J. 185).

(p) Doe d. Smyth v. Smyth (1826), 6 B. & C. 112, 117. Where a general power is exercised by will in favour of a person who might take in default of appointment, the latter title is not a higher and better title than the title under the appointment, and the appointee cannot disclaim so as to avoid death duties; see title ESTATE AND OTHER DEATH DUTIES, Vol. XIII., p. 237.

SECT. 4.

Modes of Failure of a Gift.

Ademption
(i.) by subsequent gift to donee.

Ademption
(ii.) by testator's disposition in his lifetime.

1180. A gift may also be adeemed, or taken away from the donee, by an act of the testator or of other persons subsequent to the date of the will. In certain cases a presumption arises that a gift by will for a particular purpose, or to a child or person to whom the testator stood in loco parentis, is adeemed by a subsequent gift inter vivos by the testator for the same object (g).

1181. Further, a specific gift (h) may be adeemed by the subject-matter of the gift afterwards, during the testator's life, ceasing to be part of his estate or ceasing to be subject to his right of disposition (i), or ceasing to conform to the description by which it is given (k) on account of his own disposition or change of investment (l), or other subsequent events (m).

(g) See title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 135, 136. As to the admissibility of evidence rebutting or re-supporting the presumption, see p. 619, post; title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 136; Re Shields, Corbould-Ellis v. Dales, [1912] 1 Ch. 591.

Jo. 32; and for cases of distinction in this respect, see Hayes v. Hayes (1836), 1 Keen, 97; Robinson v. Addison (1840), 2 Beav. 515.

(i) As to the application of the doctrine of ademption to general and special powers of appointment, see title POWERS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 42, 43; Re Peel's Settlement, Biddulph v. Peel, [1911] 2 Ch. 165, where appointment by deed adeemed appointment by will. If a specific gift is adeemed, a charge on it is adeemed also (Cowper v. Mantell (1856), 22 Beav. 223).

(k) See the text and cases cited in notes (l), (m), infra, notes (n), (o), p. 603, post. A specific gift of chattels in a certain locality is as a rule adeemed by their permanent removal to another locality; see the cases cited in notes (i), (p), p. 696, post.

Howell* (1886), 34 Ch. D. 166), nor does a mere request by the testator to his agents to sell (Harrison v. Asher (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 436).

(m) As by loss or destruction (Durrant v. Friend (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 343 (specific legate of chattels lost had no right to insurance money); Trustees, Executors and Agency Co., Ltd. v. Scott (1898) 24 Victorian Law Reports, 522 (fire)), or by notice to treat on compulsory purchase, even though the purchase is completed after death (Ex parte Hawkins (1843), 13 Sim. 569; Re Manchester and Southport Rail. Co. (1854), 19 Beav. 365; Re Bagot's Settlement (1862), 31 L. J. (CH.) 772 (where the purchase-money was liable to be re-invested in land); Watts v. Watts (1873), L. R. 17 Eq. 217; Manton v. Tabois (1885), 30 Ch. D. 92). No ademption is, as a rule, caused by the transfer of the specifically bequeathed property by trustees into the testator's own name unless described by reference to the trustees' ownership (Dugre v. Askew (1788), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 427; Lee v. Lee (1858), 27 L. J. (CH.) 824; and see Clough v. Clough (1834), 3 My. & K. 296; Jones v. Southall (No. 2) (1862), 32 Beav. 31), or by the unauthorised acts of third parties without the testator's knowledge (Shaftsbury (Earl) v. Shaftsbury (Countess) (1719), 2 Vern. 747; Basan v. Brandon (1836), 8 Sim. 171 (investment there authorised by testator); Jenkins v. Jones (1866).

Thus, where a change has occurred in the nature of the specific property given, even though effected by Act of Parliament, then ademption follows (n), unless the change is a change in name or form only, and the property exists as substantially the same thing although in a different shape (o). Whether the property exists substantially the same at the death of the testator is a question of fact (p).

The first question, however, in these cases is that of construction—what the testator is describing or dealing with, or, in other words, what it is that is bequeathed (q). The court may, on the words of the particular will, construed according to the usual rules in cases of descriptions (r), find that the testator contemplated a change of investment (s), and that the thing bequeathed is the property which for the time being should represent the property which the testator formerly had (t); and the gift in that case is not dependent on the specific investments representing the gift at the date of the will but includes re-investments into which they can be traced (u).

SECT. 4.

Failure of a Gift.Effect of exercise of an option.

1182. The exercise of an option, created by the testator after the date of his will, to purchase property specifically given by his will, adeems the gift (w), unless the context of the will or the circumstances of the case show that the testator had the option present to his mind at the date of the will (a), or otherwise that the donee was intended to take the whole interest of the testator (b). But the exercise of an option which is created before the date of the will does not adeem the gift, since the property in the state in which it is given is subject to the option (c).

debt.

1183. A bequest of a debt is adeemed by the whole debt being paid to the testator in his lifetime, whether the payment be compulsory or voluntary, and whether the sum be expressed in the bequest or the debt bequeathed generally (d); and the bequest is adeemed pro tanto if the testator receives payment of part of the debt (e).

Sale by court of lunacy.

1184. A sale by order of court in a subsequent lunacy of the testator does not now cause ademption (f).

But the determination after the testator's death of a lease containing a provision for determination on payment of compensation does not deprive the specific legatee of the right to the compensation (*Coyne v. this doctrine of ademption (h), no conveyance or other subsequent act of the testator relating to property comprised in the will, except an act revoking the will, prevents the will from operating with respect to the estate or interest in property of which the testator has the power of disposing by will at the time of his death (i).

1186. A gift may also fail by reason of the non-performance of a condition precedent (k), or by reason of the illegality of the gift (l).

Illegality.

SECT. 5.—Effect of Failure of a Gift.

1187. A general residuary gift includes all interests, not themselves interests in the general residue, which are otherwise undisposed of or which fail in any manner, unless the testator provides otherwise (m). There may be a particular residuary gift, or gift of the residue of a particular description of property, a specific part of which is the subject of a prior gift, and it may appear that on the failure of such latter gift the subject-matter is to fall into the particular residue (n).

subject of gift.

1188. The effect of failure of a prior life interest, or other particular interest, through the donee of that interest being dead or prevented by law from taking the gift (o), for example, owing to the attestation of the will by him or his spouse (p), or through revocation revocation; further, a mortgage did not prevent the will operating on the testator's equity of redemption, and if the mortgage were paid off and the reconveyance made to the same uses as were existing before the mortgage (Plowden v. Hyde (1852), 2 Do G. M. & G. 684, C. A.), the whole interest of the testator passed (Sidebotham v. Watson (1853), 11 Haro. 170; Phillips v. Turner (1853), 17 Beav. 194). Thus, after a sale of specifically devised property the money produced by the sale, if not otherwise disposed of by the will, passes as part of the general personal estate (Moor v. Raisbeck (1841), 12 Sim. 123, 139); and if the sale is not completed until after the testator's death, the donee takes the intermediate rents until completion to which the testator is entitled (Watts v. Watts (1873), L. R. 19 Eq. 217, 221; compare Townley v. Bedwell (1808), 14 Ves. 591).

(i) This clause "applies to cases where testators, after having devised their estates, make conveyances of them which are to have the same effect as fines and recoveries, or where they mortgage the devised estates in fee, and afterwards take a reconveyance of them to themselves and a trustee to uses to bar dower, but does not apply when the thing meant to be given is gone" (*Moor v. by codicil (q), disclaimer (r), forfeiture (s), or lapse (t), is to accelerate the subsequent interests which are limited to take effect on the regular determination of that prior interest: the court construes gifts of such interests as intended to take effect on the failure or determination of the prior interest in any manner (u). This rule applies both to real and to personal estate (a).

Such a failure of a prior gift, however, does not accelerate a subsequent executory limitation not taking effect merely on the determination of the prior interest (b); and subsequent gifts cannot be accelerated where the persons who are to take under them are only contingently ascertainable at a future date (c).

Contingent
 gifts over.

1189. Where the contingency giving rise to a gift over occurs, and is such a contingency as is allowed by law as a condition precedent to vesting of the gift over (d), then the prior gift is divested, although the gift over fails to take effect according to its tenor in favour of the donee over, owing to lapse or some rule of law (e); and the residuary donee or the person entitled on

A.; and see Crozier v. Crozier (1843), 3 Dr. & War. 363, 367. In all these cases, therefore, the question of construction arises whether the words introducing the subsequent limitations merely denote the order of succession of the limitations or whether they introduce a new contingency; see Lainson v. Lainson, supra ("after the death").

(c) Re Townsend's Estate, Townsend v. Townsend (1886), 34 Ch. D. 357, 360; Re Vernon, Garland v. Shaw (1906), 93 L. T. 48, 54; and see Re Love, Green v. Tribe, supra, where, pending a member of the class of donees under the subsequent gift coming into existence, the intermediate income was held to fall into residue. In Re Johnson, Danily v. Johnson (1893), 68 L. T. 20, the time of ascertainment of the donees was in the context also accelerated.

intestacy takes, as the case may be. The entire contingency suspending vesting of the gift over must occur in such cases (f). It is otherwise, however, where the intention of the testator is inferred that divesting shall not take place unless the gift over is effective, or where the gift over is void for uncertainty (g).

SECT. 5.
Effect of Failure of a Gift.

Part XI.—Lapse.

SECT. 1.—Nature of Lapse.

1190. The term "lapse" is strictly applied to the failure of a testamentary gift owing to the death of the devisee or legatee in the testator's lifetime (h), whether before or after the date of the will (i). As a rule (k), a devisee or legatee must survive the testator (l) in order that he or his estate may have the benefit of the gift (m), and a confirmation by codicil of a gift in a will to a legatee, who has died since the date of the will, does not prevent a lapse (n). Meaning of lapse.

1191. The doctrine of lapse applies to powers created by will, and a power of appointment (o) or of charging settled estates (p) fails if the testator survives the donee of the power; but the death of the donee of a power prior to the testator does not cause the interests of persons taking in default of appointment to lapse (q). Application to powers.

(f) Where the gift over is to a class not in existence, the coming into existence of the class may be part of the contingency on which the gift over is to take effect, and accordingly, where the other events giving rise to the gift over happen, but the class fails to come into existence, the original gift is not divested, the combined contingency not having happened (Jackson v. Noble (1838), 2 Keen, 590, explained in Robinson v. Wood (1858), 4 Jur. (N. S.) 625). Similarly a gift over, on a contingent event which happens, to the survivor of a number of persons is contingent also on the survivor existing to take the gift, and if he does not exist, the prior gift is not divested (Jones v. Davies (1880), 28 W. R. 455; Re Deacon's Trusts, Deacon v. Deacon, Hagger v. Heath (1906), 95 L. T. 701). SECT. 1.
Nature of Lapse.

A power to appoint by will to an individual cannot be exercised in favour of his executors if the individual dies before the donee of the power (r), and therefore any appointment to the individual lapses if he predecease the donee (s); but where a power of appointment among a class or among named individuals is given by will, and all the objects survive the testator, but one or more die in the lifetime of the donee of the power, the power may be exercised in favour of the survivors (t).

SECT. 2.—Exceptions from Lapse.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Moral Obligation.

Gifts in pursuance
obligation.

1192. The doctrine of lapse does not apply, although the legatee predeceases the testator, where the legacy is given with the intention of discharging a moral obligation (u), whether legally binding or not, which is recognised by the testator and is existing at his death (x); but the fact that the gift is made in pursuance of a covenant by the testator does not protect it from lapse (a).

Gift of debt.

A bequest of a debt to the debtor or to him, his executors and administrators, coupled with a direction to hand over securities, lapses like an ordinary legacy (b).

predeceasing the testator an alternative bequest is intended to be substituted (c), such alternative gift takes effect notwithstanding the death of the original legatee in the testator's lifetime; but if the intention is merely to signify that the legatee is to take a vested and transmissible interest, the legacy lapses in the ordinary way (d). Thus, the mere addition to the name of the devisee (e) or legatee (f) of words of limitation such as "heirs," "executors," or the like, or a declaration that a devise or legacy shall not lapse, if unaccompanied by a gift by way of substitution (g), or a declaration that a gift shall vest as from the date of the will, even though words of limitation are added to the name of the legatee or devisee (h), does not prevent a lapse. On the other hand, a declaration that, if any of certain named legatees should die in the lifetime of the testator leaving issue living at his death the benefits given to the legatees so dying should not lapse, but should take effect as if such legatees had died immediately after the testator, prevents a lapse, and the benefits of such legatees pass to their respective legal personal representatives (i).

1194. A legacy can be given directly to the executors or administrators of a deceased person, in which case the legacy becomes part of the deceased person's estate and does not lapse by the death of all the persons who were such executors or administrators at the date of the will before the testator's death (k).

Questions whether particular words or expressions show an intention to substitute an alternative gift, especially where the executors or administrators of the legatee are mentioned, have frequently called for judicial decision, the decisions in several instances not being easily reconcilable (l).

Where no intention to the contrary is contained in the will, a devise of an estate tail or a quasi-estate tail does not lapse if the devisee dies in the lifetime of the testator leaving issue capable of inheriting under the entail (m). The devise in such case takes effect as if the death of the devisee had occurred immediately after the death of the testator (n).

1196. Similarly, in the absence of a contrary intention in the will, a devise or bequest of real or personal property to a child or other issue (o) of the testator for any estate or interest not determinable at or before the death of such child or issue does not lapse if the devisee or legatee predeceases the testator, leaving issue who are living at the death of the latter (p), but takes effect as if the devisee or legatee had died immediately after the testator, and becomes disposable under the will (q) of the devisee or legatee, or as part of his estate if he dies intestate (r); and if the testator intends a gift to go over in the event of his child predeceasing him he must expressly so provide (s).

Exceptions
from Lapse.

The gift must, however, be to the legatee as a persona designata (d), and the rule is not applicable where the gift is to a class not ascertainable until the death of the testator (e), even where there happens to be only one member of the class (f).

Class gifts.

1197. A gift to a child, though dependent on the fact of there being issue of the devisee or legatee living at the testator's death, is not a gift to such issue, but takes effect exactly as if the actual death of the devisee or legatee had happened immediately after the death of the testator, and with all the consequences (g), and devolves subject to any burden (h) or condition (i) which under the will would have been imposed on the devisee or legatee if he had survived the testator. Thus, if a daughter of the testator dies intestate in his lifetime, her surviving husband may take an estate by the curtesy (k) in real estate devised to her by the will (l). Eq. 298); and a direction that a share given to a daughter should be subject to the trusts of her marriage settlement takes effect notwithstanding that the daughter predeceases her father (Re Hone's Trusts (1883), 22 Ch. D. 663). But a legacy saved from lapse by the fictitious survivorship created by the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 33, is not caught by a covenant of the deceased legatee to settle property acquired during coverture (*Pearce v. Exceptions from Lapse. This fictitious survivorship causes a lapse where a child to whom property has been specifically devised by a parent devises his residuary real estate to such parent and predeceases him, leaving issue, and the property passes to the child's heir-at-law (n).

Devise by child to parent.

Appointment. 1198. A gift under a general power of appointment to a child predeceasing the testator and leaving issue is preserved from lapse (o), but not a gift under a special power (p), or a power of charging given under a will to a tenant for life who dies before the testator (q).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Settled Shares.

Settled shares.

1199. A bequest of an absolute interest in a fixed share of residue to a named person followed by a direction settling such share does not lapse by reason of the legatee's death in the lifetime of the testator (r). It is otherwise where the original gift is to a class (s) or where the share of residue cannot be regarded as fixed (t).

Future gifts.

1200. A legacy to a legatee to become vested at the expiration of six years from a testator's decease apparently fails if the legatee does not survive the period (u). If, however, a testator directs payment of the income of a fund for three years after his death to one person followed by a bequest of the capital to another, the bequest of the capital does not lapse by the latter's death prior to the expiration of the three years (b); nor does the death of a prospective tenant for life in the lifetime of the testator cause a gift in 1201. There may be a joint legacy as well as a joint grant (g). Joint tenants. Where property is devised or bequeathed to joint tenants, and one dies in the testator's lifetime, the doctrine of survivorship prevents a lapse occurring, and the survivor or survivors take the whole (h). Similarly, if the interest of one of the joint tenants is revoked, the others take the whole and there is no lapse (i).

1202. In the case of a devise (k) or bequest (l) to persons as tenants in common, not being a gift to a class (m), the doctrine of survivorship does not apply, unless a contrary intention is expressed in the will (n), and the share of one dying before the testator lapses. Tenancy in common. The revocation of a share also occasions a lapse (o). It seems, however, that if one of the named persons has been previously referred to in the will as dead the fund is divisible among the others and there is no lapse (p).

SECT. 2.

SUB-SECT. 6.—*Class Gifts.Exceptions from Lapse.

Class gifts.

1203. In the case of a gift to a fluctuating (q) class (r), as tenants in common, to be ascertained at any particular time, no lapse occurs if a member of the class dies antecedently to such time, the class being automatically contracted (s). Similarly, where a member of the class is precluded from participation expressly by exception or revocation (t), or by his attesting the will (a), there is no lapse, and the property is divided among those members capable of taking. This rule is not, however, applicable where an appointment is made under a power to objects and non-objects; in such a case the part invalidly appointed goes as in default of appointment (b).

Proviso against lapse.

A proviso in a class gift that the share of any member predeceasing the testator and leaving issue shall not lapse but shall go to his executors does not cause the share of a member dying without issue to lapse so as to exclude the other members of the class from taking such share (c).

Meaning of class gift.

1204. Prima facie a class gift is a gift to a class of persons included and comprehended under some general description and bearing a certain relation to the testator or another person (d). Thus, where a testator divides his residue into as many equal shares as he shall have children surviving him, or predeceasing him leaving issue, and gives a share to or in trust for each such child, the gift is to a class (e). There may also be a class compounded of persons answering one or other of alternative descriptions, as, for example, "the children of A. and the children of B." (f), or "the children of A. who attain twenty-one and the issue of such as die under that age" (g).

(q) The rule applies whether the class fluctuates by increase or diminution (see note (i), p. 616, post), or by diminution alone; see Dimond v. Bostock (1875), 10 Ch. App. 358; Leigh v. Leigh (1854), 17 Beav. 605; Lee v. Pain (1845), 4 Hare, 201, 250.

SECT. 2.
Exceptions
from Lapse.

1205. Gifts to persons described only by relationship are sometimes construed as class gifts (i), and sometimes as gifts to individuals (k). A gift may be none the less a gift to a class because some of the members are referred to by name (l), or because a person who would otherwise fall within the class is excluded by name (m). On the other hand, a gift to an individual and the children of another individual is not regarded as a class gift (n), unless there is something in the context to show that the testator intended to form a class (o); and gifts to several persons designated by name (p) or number (q) or by reference (r) are not class gifts,

1206. A child of the testator dying in his lifetime and leaving issue living at the testator's death is not by virtue of the Wills Act, 1837 (u), included in a class gift (a), and the other members of the class who survive the testator take the subject of the gift between them (b); but the testator may by apt words substitute the issue of a member of the class for their parent so as to make such issue members of the class (c).

Time when class ascertained.

1207. The class may be ascertained at any particular point of time (d), as, for instance, at the death of the testator (e), or of the tenant for life (f), or during the testator's lifetime at the date when he made his will (g), and the period of distribution may be postponed to a different and later time (h).

In class gifts the interests of all the members must vest in interest at the same time (i).

SECT. 1.—General Powers.

Exercise of general powers.

1212. A general devise or bequest of realty or personalty, or of realty or personalty described in a general manner (f), operates, unless a contrary intention appears by the will, as an execution of any general power (g) of appointment (h) capable of being exercised by will (i), even though such power is contingent (k).

must be clearly expressed in or implied by the will (m). It is not indicated by an express confirmation of the settlement creating the power, where the testator's power does not extend to the whole subject-matter of the settlement (n), or by an ineffectual attempt to appoint (o), or by reason of the power being contained in a settlement made by the testator or any other person and prior to the date of the testator's will (p). Under this provision property over which a testator has a general power of appointment is treated as if it were his own property, and it is unnecessary for the testator to refer to the instrument creating, or to the subject-matter of, a general power (q), or to use technical language in executing the power (r).

1213. A general devise or bequest does not, however, operate as an exercise of a power vested in a testator to revoke existing uses and appoint to other uses, except, it seems, where the gift would otherwise be inoperative (s); and the rule does not apply, in the absence of a contrary intention expressed in the will, where the donee of a general testamentary power is domiciled abroad (t). Exceptions from rule.

is not general where it must be exercised subject to prescribed conditions, as, for instance, by will expressly referring to the power (b), or for the benefit of special persons (c); nor is a power to create a charge upon realty and to appoint the sum raised a general power within the meaning of the statutory provision (d).

1215. A will containing a general devise or bequest, made before the creation of a general power to appoint by will, and allowed by the testator to remain his will without alteration until his death, is a good execution of the power that has been created (e). A power created by will lapses unless the appointor survives the testator (f), even though the appointor refers to the power and purports to exercise it (g).

1216. An appointee under a power derives title from the instrument creating the power and not from the appointment (h). assets applicable to the payment of the appointor's debts after all his own property has been exhausted (l).

If the appointor is an undischarged bankrupt at the date of his death the appointed fund does not become divisible among the creditors as part of the bankrupt's property, but is payable to his executors for the benefit of subsequent creditors (m).

SECT. 1.

Undischarged bankrupt.

1217. Where an appointment under a general testamentary power is ineffectual, the property concerned, whether real or personal (n), devolves as part of the testator's estate, or, in default of appointment, according to the intention of the donee of the power (o). It is not always easy to ascertain what his intention is.

Thus, a testator shows an intention to make the property his own for all purposes by giving it to his executors, or trustees (p), or by dealing with the settled property and his other property as one mass, without making the appointment either to executors or Ineffectual appointment.

The appointed fund passes to the executors "as such," and vests in them as legal and not as equitable assets within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 9 (1) (Re Hadley, Johnson v. Hadley, [1909] 1 Ch. 20, 22, C. A.); see title ESTATE AND OTHER DEATH DUTIES, Vol. XIII., pp. 219, 220. Where real property is appointed by the will of a person dying since 1897 under a general power, the land vests in his personal representatives (Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 1). It is doubtful whether the effect of this is to make the land liable as legal assets for payment of debts; see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 246.

trustees, or to any individual object (q). No such intention, however, is shown where the donee of a general power makes a will dealing only with the settled property (r), or expressly distinguishes between his own and the settled property (s); and an express direction to pay debts, coupled with the appointment of an executor, takes the fund from persons entitled in default of appointment only so far as it is required to pay debts (a).

SECT. 2.—Special Powers.

Special powers.

1218. The exercise of a special power of appointment by will is purely a question of intention (b), the burden of proof being upon those who assert affirmatively the exercise of the power (c). A mere general devise or bequest does not operate as an execution of a special power (d). Thus, a general devise by a testator possessed of no real estate, but having a special power to appoint real estate, to persons some of whom are objects (e), or even to the sole object of the power (f), is not a valid exercise of a special power.

Essentials of exercise.

1219. To exercise a special power there must be either (1) a reference to the power (g), or (2) a reference to the property subject to the power (h), or (3) an intention otherwise expressed in the will to exercise the power (i).

Reference to power.

1220. Any reference to a special power, however slight, is sufficient (k). Thus, an indirect reference to the power (l), or even a reference to the instrument creating the power, may be enough (m). The reference must be specific (n); but if the intention to exercise a special power is clear, an inaccurate or incomplete reference to it may suffice (o). A reference to a "beneficial" power may be treated as a sufficient reference to a special power (p). On the other hand, an erroneous recital by a donee of a power that another is entitled to the property subject to the power does not amount to an execution of the power (q); nor does a statement, following an appointment to one object of the power, that the donee makes no further appointment as she wishes the fund to pass directly to two other named objects of the power amount to her appointment by implication to the latter (r).

1221. Where a testator describes and disposes of specific property, over which he has a special power, in favour of objects (s), or of persons some of whom are objects (t), without mentioning the power, the inference is that he intended to exercise it, even though he misdescribes the property (a), but the intention of the testator to dispose of the specific property subject to the power must be clear (b). equal to the fund subject to the power (d), does not sufficiently evidence an intention to exercise the power. The effect of excepting out of a general gift part of property subject to a special power is to make the residue of the property pass (e).

If the gift is prima facie specific (f), evidence as to the testator's property is admissible in order to show whether he intended to exercise his power (g). If the testator possesses property of his own answering the description the usual inference is that he did not intend to exercise the power (h); and a reference to property of the kind which is subject to the power coupled with an attempt to dispose of it in an unauthorised manner may rebut a presumption of intention to exercise the power (i).

power.

1222. The intention of a testator to exercise a special power, if not expressed, can only be inferred from the words of his will and the circumstances at the time of executing it which were known to him, and which the court, putting itself in his place, is bound to regard (k). Two matters must be gathered from the construction of the will, namely, that the testator had the power in mind at the time of making his will and that he wished to exercise it (l). An intention to exercise a power is not, as a rule, implied if there is a gift over in default of appointment (m).

Will prior to special power.

It requires very clear indications in the language of a will to infer an intention to exercise a special power which was non-existent at the date of the will (n).

A will containing an express but partial exercise of a special power and a residuary gift prima facie applicable only to the testator's property does not operate as an appointment of the balance of the property subject to the power (o), unless such an intention can be implied (p).

Language such as "I wish to leave at my death everything I have power to will to" an object of the power, as a rule, and especially where the testator has no other power (q), indicates an intention to exercise a special power (r), even though the bequest includes the testator's own property (s), or the testator purports to create interests in excess of the power, such as an absolute interest in lieu of a life interest (t).

A residuary gift to persons who are objects of a special power may operate as an appointment to them of a fund wrongly appointed to a person who is not an object (a).

The fact that a testator possesses a general as well as a special power does not ipso facto prevent a general reference to powers from being sufficient to exercise a special power, but may be taken into consideration in arriving at the testator's intention (b); where the word "appoint" is used, an intention may be gathered that the testator means to exercise a special power (c), especially if he has no general power (d). Extrinsic evidence is admissible where the word "appoint" is used to show that the testator possessed no other power of appointment at his death (e).

A direction to pay debts and general and testamentary expenses out of a fund which ex hypothesi includes the fund subject to the special power is not in itself sufficient to negative a presumption of an intention to exercise the power otherwise established (f).

1223. Where a person has a special power of appointment and also a power of revocation and new appointment, an appointment expressed in general words does not extend to property which the appointor cannot appoint without the exercise of the power of revocation, if there is other property to which the appointment can apply (g). Similarly, a will exercising a special power, which is afterwards exercised by deed reserving a power of revocation, does not affect the property appointed by deed (h).

1224. An appointment by will in exercise of a special power in favour of an object of the power is not preserved from lapse in the event of the object predeceasing the appointor and leaving issue living at the latter's death (i).

General principle.

1225. The cardinal rule of English law as to the effect of a will is that the intention of the testator, as declared by him and apparent (k) in the words of his will, has effect given to it, so far and as nearly as may be consistently with law (l). The application

Functions of a Court
of Construction.

Ascertaining
intention.

1226. The first duty (o) of a court of construction is, therefore, to ascertain the language of the will, to read the words used and ascertain the intention of the testator from them (p); it is not merely to ascertain what the testator's actual mental intentions were (q). Where the will must be in writing, the only question is, what is the meaning of the words used in that writing (r). The expressed intention in all cases is considered to be the actual intention (s), and the court cannot give effect to any intention which is not expressed or implied in the language of the will (t).

1227. The court of construction, in ascertaining the intention, is concerned with three distinct questions, namely: (1) what words has the testator used to express his intentions (a); (2) what is the meaning of such words in relation to the persons and things described, that is to say, who and what are the specific persons and things to be identified as the donees and the subjects of disposition or as the persons and things otherwise mentioned in the will (b); and (3) what is the meaning of the words in relation to the disposition of such property among such donees (c). Although, as a matter of construction, these questions may become inter-related, the attitude of the court is in the first instance distinct in each case with regard to the evidence admissible.

Functions of a Court
of Construction.Giving effect to ascertained intention.Rules of law and construction.Necessary authentic-ation.

1228. When the intention of the testator has been discovered, the inquiry then to be made is whether there is any rule preventing the intention from taking effect (d), and, generally, how the intention can be effectuated; and the court is under a duty to give effect to it accordingly (e).

Any rule the application of which is independent of the intention of the testator, and may operate against or to defeat that intention, is generally known as a rule of law (f).

Any rule adopted by the court for ascertaining (g) or effectuating (h) the intention of the testator as declared in the will, and dependent for its application to any will upon whether it is consonant with or contrary to the whole will (i), is generally called a rule or canon of construction (k).

1229. With regard to all wills under which the title of the donees is by law subject to that of the testator's personal representative (l), a court of construction does not enforce an unadmitted (m) title

(d) Garth v. Baldwin (1755), 2 Ves. Sen. 646, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 655; Tatham v. Drummond (1864), 4 10 G. J. & Sm. 484, 486 (mortmain). "The question whether the intention be consistent with the rules of law or not can never arise till it is settled what the intention was" (Hodgson v. Ambrose (1780), 1 Doug. (K. B.) 337, per BULLER, J., at p. 342). As to the doubtful and ambiguous cases of construction, where the court acts on the maxim ut res magis valeat quam pereat, see p. 668, post; and see title PERPETUITIES, Vol. XXII., pp. 306 et seq.

(e) Doe d. Trennewen v. Permeuven (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 431, 436; Smith v. Osborne (1857), 6 H. L. Cas. 375, 393 ("however expressed"; see p. 652, post); Rose v. Rose, [1897] 1 I. R. 9, 57, C. A. (the "fundamental theory" of the function of the court).

(f) For example, the rules of law as to mortmain and limitation of estates and interests generally. The rule in Shelley's Case (1581), 1 Co. Rep. 93 b (see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 226), is termed a rule of law, not a rule of construction; but as to how far it is a rule to give effect to the intention, see Bowen v. Lewis (1884), 9 App. Cas. 890, per Lord CAIRNS, L.C., at p. 907; compare note (h), infra.

(g) For example, see the general principles stated, pp. 651 et seq., post.

(h) Thus, the cy-près doctrine (as to which see title PERPETUITIES, Vol. XXII., pp. 367 et seq.) is termed a rule of construction, but is inoperative in determining in the first instance the intention of the testator (Monypenny v. Dering (1850), 7 Hare, 568, per WIGRAM, V.-C., at p. 580). Some cases under the doctrine of implication are based, not on ascertaining the intention, which ex hypothesi is not expressed at all, but on effectuating intentions which are expressed and ascertained; see Parker v. Tootal (1865), 11 H. L. Cas. 143, per Lord WESTBURY, L.C., at p. 161.

(i) Certain "rules of administration" are applied by the court in administering the estate of a testator, and are also dependent for their application on his intention, namely, the rules as to the primary liability of personal estate for debts, and as to interest on legacies (see Walford v. Walford, [1912] A. C. 658, 663). As to such rules generally, see titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., pp. 285 et seq.; RENT-CHARGES AND ANNUITIES, Vol. XXIV., p. 500.

(k) As to the general principles of construction, see p. 651, post; as to canons of construction applied in special cases, see pp. 665 et seq., post.

(m) Compare Jerroise v. Northumberland (Duke) (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 559, 570; Robinson v. Cooper (1831), 4 Sim. 131; Lock v. Foote (1833), 4 Sim. 132.

under a will until it has been authenticated by the grant of probate or letters of administration with the will annexed in the court entitled to grant probate of it (n); and the court, in general, receives such grant, while unrevoked, as conclusive evidence of the testamentary capacity of the testator, the testamentary nature of the instrument, and the validity of the will as regards form and execution (o). This conclusive effect applies to probate even where the original will was forged (p), or obtained by fraud or imposition (q), and can only be put aside in a court of construction by showing that the probate itself was forged (r), or obtained by fraud (s), or that the alleged testator was living (t), or that the court by which it was granted had no sufficient jurisdiction (u). Probate is not conclusive, however, as to the right of the testator to dispose of the property concerned (a) or other collateral matters (b).

Functions

of Construction.

Effect of

The court assumes that all documents admitted to probate are testamentary documents to be construed in order to ascertain the intention (c), and that they properly constitute the whole of the testamentary dispositions of the testator (d).

(n) Yates v. Thomson (1835), 3 Cl. & Fin. 544, 575, 576, H. L.; Tucker v. Inman (1842), 4 Man. & G. 1049; Price v. Dechurst (1838), 4 My. & Cr. 76; Real Property Commissioners' Fourth Report, p. 38. Formerly a court of equity had jurisdiction to entertain a bill to establish a will against an heir-at-law (Colclough v. Boyse (1857), 6 H. L. Cas. 1), but would not direct an issue devisavit vel non against the heir (Lorton (Viscount) v. Kingston (Earl), Kingston (Earl) v. Lorton (Viscount) (1838), 5 Cl. & Fin. 269, H. L.); and if an heir impeached a will of real estate, the court had discretion to direct an issue devisavit vel non in a court of law, or merely to remove obstacles to the heir asserting his title in ejectment; see, for example, Cooke v. Cholmondeley (1849), 2 Mac. & G. 18; Boyse v. Rossborough (1857), 6 H. L. Cas. 2, where the earlier cases are discussed; and, generally, Real Property Commissioners' Fourth Report, pp. 36, 37. The practice is now in general governed by the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), ss. 61—64. Jurisdiction to correct mistake.

Attempts to oust jurisdiction of court.

1230. A mistake in a will, such as an error in a name or description or in the insertion or omission of any words, whether by the testator or his draftsman, can be corrected by the court of construction (e), but only on the references obtained from the whole will, and not on any parol evidence (f), other than such evidence of the material circumstances as is admissible in construing the will (g).

The court has no jurisdiction to correct the probate (h), and must be satisfied on the construction of the will alone that there is a mistake or omission in the will; whenever the matter is merely doubtful, the court adheres to the words of the will (i).

1231. The jurisdiction of the court in the construction of a will is not ousted by the fact that the will is in a foreign language, or has to be construed by foreign rules of construction (k); or by any direction or recommendation by the testator that questions of construction are to be decided in a different manner, for example, by the trustees or executors, or by arbitration (a); and a direction that a beneficiary resorting to litigation for the purpose shall forfeit his interest is inoperative to the extent of preventing him from seeking the aid of the court (b).

A.); except where the correction can be made as a matter of construction of the will taken as a whole; see p. 630, ante. Evidence may be given in a court of probate in order to except words out of a grant on the ground of want of knowledge and approval on the part of the testator; see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XLV., pp. 178, 179; as to omitting from the probate words introduced in the will by mistake, see ibid., pp. 168, 179; *Vaughan v. On the other hand, a condition that a beneficiary shall not dispute the validity of the will (c), or of any other instrument (d), or shall not interfere with the management of the testator's estate (e), and on breach of the condition shall wholly or partially forfeit his gift, may be valid and operative for the purpose of causing a forfeiture on litigation by the donee (f). Such a condition, however, is not construed prima facie to extend to cases where there is a reasonable cause for litigation (g), or to defending proceedings taken by persons other than the donee (h); if it is couched in language which prevents the donee resorting to any proceedings whatever concerning his gift, even to secure its enjoyment (i), or if in the case of gifts of personal estate (h) it is merely imposed in terrorem (l) on the legatee, it is repugnant to the gift and void.

A donee having a vested interest does not dispute a will by merely claiming payment of a legacy directed to accumulate, in respect of which he is entitled to give a discharge and put an end to the accumulation (*Phillips v. has not yet happened (n) and that it is a matter of duty not to answer a contingent question unless the court has before it a representative of every interest that may in any event be affected (o).

Further, in cases of doubtful construction, the court may decline to force a title under the will on a purchaser, even where as between parties claiming under the testator the court would interpret the will and declare and enforce the rights arising under it (p); a title may, however, be forced on a purchaser where the doubt is resolved by the application of a broad, general principle of construction not depending on any context (q).

Proceedings.

1233. Proceedings in the High Court of Justice (r) to determine the construction of a will may be commenced by originating summons (s); the costs of such proceedings are subject to the rules relating to actions to administer the testator's estate (t).

SECT. 2.—Evidence Admissible in a Court of Construction.

SUB-SECT. 1.—General Rule.

General rule.

1234. In a court of construction (u) the only legitimate evidence of the testator's intentions is the will itself properly authenticated (w); in order that the will may be properly expounded, however the court adopts the general rule that any evidence of the circumstances is admissible which in its nature and effect simply explains what the testator has written (x); but no evidence can be admissible, except possibly in one class of cases (a), which in its nature or effect is applicable to the purpose of showing merely what he intended to have written (b). In other words, parol evidence is not to be resorted to except for the purpose of proving a fact which makes intelligible

(u) As to evidence in a court of probate, see title EVIDENCE, Vol. XIII., pp. 471, 472; and p. 511, ante. There is a distinction, in the matter of evidence, between an inquiry into the meaning of a will and an inquiry into the existence of such a document, or an inquiry to what extent it represents the testamentary intentions of the deceased (Reffell v. Reffell (1866), L. R. 1 P. & D. 139, 141, explaining Guardhouse v. Blackburn (1866), L. R. 1 P. & D. 109, 114).

SECT. 2.

Evidence Admissible
in a Court
of Construction.

This rule applies to the construction of wills governed by the law of any other country as well as to English wills, and is therefore independent of the statutory requirements as to form and execution (d).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Evidence of the Words Used and Dispositions Made by the Testator.

1235. With regard to discovering what words the testator used, and what dispositions he made, the court of construction accepts the probate, in all cases where the title of the donees is by law subject to that of the testator's personal representative (c), as conclusively showing the state in which the will was at its execution (f), and containing the whole will to be construed (g). By statute, the probate is evidence of the will in certain other cases (h). With these exceptions the words of the will must be directly proved or be admitted, and the probate is not admissible in evidence for this purpose (i). Probate.

The court may in all cases look at the original will in order to settle questions arising on the punctuation, or on the introduction of a capital letter or other mark which may indicate where a sentence or clause was intended to begin, and which may affect its sense, or on the effect of blanks in the will, and generally in order to see whether any light is thrown on the construction of the will by its form (k). Original will considered.

If none of the parties object, however, and an inaccuracy is alleged in a probate, the court looks at the original will (Re Cliffe's Trusts, [1892] 2 Ch. 229; see also Philipps v. Chamberlaine (1798), 4 Ves. 51, 57 (mistake alleged); Compton v. Bloxham (1845), 2 Coll. 201, 204 (original will construed)). In Wordsworth v. Wood (1847), 1 H. L. Cas. 129, 157, n., the original will was produced and was found to be different from the probate, but the words of the probate were adhered to, the proceedings being in demurrer.

(g) In Hubbard v. Alexander (1876), 3 Ch. D. 738, evidence was admitted to show that two codicils were not two distinct instruments, though not for the purpose of construing them in order to determine whether they were cumulative in effect. It appears that this evidence was wrongly admitted; see note (n), p. 650, post. Such evidence is admissible in a court of probate (Jenner v. Finch (1879), 5 P. D. 106).

(h) See title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 212. An heir-at-law may be bound by estoppel by being a party to proceedings in a court of probate as one of the next of kin (Beardsley v. Beardsley, [1899] 1 Q. B. 746).

SECT. 2.
Evidence
Admissible
in a Court
of Con-

Other documents, Evidence to translate the language.

1236. A document, though not admitted to probate, may be referred to in a will in such a manner that the court of construction is entitled to look at it, as being virtually incorporated in that which is admitted to probate. In order that this may be possible the document must be clearly identified by the description given of it by the will, and it must be shown to have been in existence at the time when the will was executed (l).

1237. Where the characters in which a will is written are difficult to decipher (m), or the language of the will is a language not understood by the court (n), or is the language of a trade or business or locality with which the testator was acquainted (o), the evidence of persons who are skilled in deciphering writing or who understand the language in which the will is written, is admissible to declare what the words and characters are, and to inform the court of their proper meaning (p). On the other hand, evidence cannot be given to explain words or symbols which are not the language of any trade, business or locality, and are known only to the testator himself (q), unless the will itself refers to the subject of such evidence as the means of identifying them (r). Further, in order to discover the ordinary meaning of any word, the mind of the court may be informed not only by reference to dictionaries of good reputation (s), or other contemporary literary sources (t), but also, it seems, in the case of words describing property, by evidence of the meaning ordinarily given to such words among those who deal in such property (u). Evidence cannot, however, be adduced, as a general rule, to show the meaning of common words as understood by the testator or other persons (v), where that meaning is not the ordinary meaning of the words in the testator's society (a).

In Re Harrison, Turner v. Hellard (1885), 30 Ch. D. 390, C. A., Lord ESHER, M. R., at p. 393, said that he knew of "no rule that for the purpose of construing a will you may not look at the original will itself," and BAGGALLAY, L. J., at p. 394, while agreeing that for many purposes the first thing to be looked at is the probate copy considered that it was very material to look at the original will to explain a blank, which was consistent either with an accidental omission to fill up the blank, or with an intention not to fill it up; see also Philipps v. Chamberlaine (1798), 4 Ves. 51, 57; Thellusson v. Woodford (1799), 4 Ves. 227, 325 (parenthesis); Belaney v. Belaney (1867), 2 Ch. App. 138, where the original will was ignored; Milome v. Long (1857), 3 Jur. (N. S.) 1073, where the court looked at the will, which confirmed the view taken from the probate; Lunn v. Osborne (1834), 7 Sim. 56, 61; *Compton v. Other documents may also be admitted in evidence for the purpose of explaining a latent ambiguity (Dillon v. Harris. supra; and see p. 651, post).

In the case of a foreign will there must be a translation of the instrument, and evidence may be admitted to prove (1) the translation of the words; (2) the technical meaning of words which are of a technical description or which have a peculiar meaning different from that which, literally translated into English, they would bear; and (3) any established principle of construction of the particular instrument by the corresponding foreign tribunal (b).

1236. Evidence can never be given in a court of construction (c) in order to complete an incomplete will (d), or to add to (e), vary (f), or contradict (g) the terms of a will, or generally to prove any testamentary intentions of the testator not found in the will (h), or even to reconcile two contradictory clauses, and declare which of the two was the testator's real intention (i).

No evidence is admissible which is offered to prove matters, not as constituting an obligation accepted by the donee (k), but as to the testamentary wishes of the testator not manifested in the way required by statute (l).

1239. Where power is given by the will to the donee to dispose of property in accordance with wishes verbally expressed by the testator, and there is no trust by implication in default of disposition under the power, evidence is not admissible to show his wishes (m).

1240. A testator cannot by his will prospectively create for himself a power to dispose of his property by an instrument not duly executed as a will or codicil, or by parol; and evidence of any such instrument or parol disposition is therefore inadmissible to show his testamentary wishes (n).

Evidence Admissible in a Court of Construction.

Evidence necessarily admissible.

1241. The words of a testator's will necessarily refer to facts and circumstances respecting his property and his family and other persons and things; the meaning and application of his words cannot be ascertained without evidence of such facts and circumstances (p). Evidence is therefore necessarily admissible to show facts and circumstances corresponding, as far as possible, with those referred to in the will, for example, to show that persons and property actually exist as described (q).

The court, however, must first attempt to construe the words of the will (r); and the question whether further evidence is to be considered and what is the materiality of that evidence depends on the question whether there is any subject which the words fit (s).

Adapting facts to words:

1242. The evidence necessarily admitted may disclose some subject-matter such that the words of the will, when construed according to the usual rules (t), in the opinion of the court plainly and unambiguously describe such subject-matter, and that there is a plain, unambiguous and effectual (u) gift with reference to such subject-matter. In such a case the court does not consider any further evidence (a), unless it is to find some other subject-matter to which the same words might equally, or with a negligible variation, be applicable (b).

Evidence Admissible
in a Court
of Construction.

Evidence then not admitted.

Thus, the court does not then admit any evidence adduced to show that the testator must have meant some person or property different from that which his words plainly and unambiguously describe (c), such as evidence of the testator's fuller knowledge of or intimacy with other persons (d), or his want of knowledge of the person so described (e), or his habit of describing any other person in the same terms (f); or the state or value generally of the testator's property (g), where the will itself does not make that state or value of importance (h); or his knowledge or management (i), or the history (k), of the property or any part of it; or the testator's habits of describing other property in the same terms (l).

C. 1, where, however, the question was rather of construction of the will than of identification.

(h) Such evidence may become admissible (see the text, infra) where the descriptions are not clear in the will, and unintelligible without taking such evidence (Ponneren v. Poyntz (1785), 1 Bro. C. C. 472, explained in Druce v. Denison (1801), 6 Ves. 385, 401; Colpoys v. Colpoys (1822), Jac. 451; *A.-G. v. The rule applies especially to cases where the property is described by its local description (Anon. (1567), Dyer, 261 b; Woodden v. Osbourn (1599), Cro. Eliz. 674; Doe d. Browne v. Greening (1814), 3 M. & S. 171, 173; Doe d. Tyrell v. Lyford (1816), 4 M. & S. 550, 555; Doe d. Templeman v. Martin (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 771; Miller v. Travers (1832), 8 Bing. 244; *Homer v. (k) Millard v. Bailey (1866), L. R. 1 Eq. 378 (gift of shares which had been doubled or subdivided).

(l) Doe d. Chichester v. Orenden (1810), 3 Taunt. 147; Doe d. Chichester v. Orenden (1816), 4 Dow, 65, H. L. ("my estate of A."; evidence not admissible to show testator's habit of including outlying property in this estate); Doe d. Brown v. Brown (1809), 11 East, 441 (devise of "copyhold estates"; evidence not admissible to show habit of describing certain freeholds as copyhold); *Doe d. Tyrell v. below (m), is considered in all other cases (n), and also in every case where the further evidence is adduced to show that the words of the will might equally, or with a negligible variation (o), be applicable to two or more subjects (p).

Thus, if the words were plainly and unambiguously satisfied prior to, but not at, the date of the will, as, for example, where the person described has died (q), or the property described has ceased to conform to the description (r) before that date, further evidence is admitted to discover some other subject existing at that date to which the words may refer as understood by the testator.

Again, where the words do not plainly and unambiguously refer to any subject, as in cases where, on admission of the evidence necessarily admitted, it is seen that they refer to more than one subject (s), or do not describe any subject either at all or only with inaccuracy (t), further evidence is admitted to discover the true subject to which the words may refer (a).

Generally, where the words of the will are insensible, that is to say, have no reasonable application to the circumstances proved (b), further evidence is admitted to discover the meaning of the words with reference to which the will may have full effect (c).

In all such cases, for the purpose of determining the object of the testator's bounty (d), or the subject of disposition (e), or the quantity of interest intended to be given by the will (f), or the other persons and things described by the will (g), and the facts and circumstances there referred to, a court of construction may, and must (h), inquire into every material fact relating to the person or thing said to be identified by that description, as, for example, to the person claiming to be that object, or the property said to be the subject of disposition, and into the circumstances of the testator and of his family and affairs (i).

For the same purpose evidence is receivable, further, to enable the court to ascertain all the persons and facts which were known to the testator at the time when he made his will (k), and thus to (d) For examples of construction with the aid of evidence as to the circumstances of the donee, or of decisions that evidence was admissible, see Abbot v. Massie (1796), 3 Ves. 148 (gifts to "W. place itself in the testator's position (l). The court, it has been said, puts itself into the testator's arm-chair (m). These facts and circumstances, evidence of which may be given, may be called the material circumstances.

This principle, however, of the court putting itself in the testator's position may be of no assistance where the subject-matter of the particular dispute was not in existence at the date of his will (n).

donee (o); but where on construction of the words of the will it is clear that there is a mistake, evidence of surrounding circumstances (p) becomes admissible to prove how the mistake arose, in order to identify the true subject (q).

Evidence is admitted, therefore, of the habits of the testator (r), as, for example, the practice of the testator to call a certain person by a nickname (s) or other name by which he was not commonly known (t), but by which he is described in the will. Similarly, with regard to a description of property which is not accurately satisfied as ordinarily understood, evidence is admitted of the testator's habit of dealing with certain property under that description and of its accuracy as he understood it (u).

When any subject is thus discovered which not only is within the words of the instrument, but exhausts the whole of those words, then the investigation must stop; the court takes that interpretation and does not go further (a), unless it is shown that another interpretation also exhausts the words (b) and that there is an equivocation, or ambiguity arising from the circumstances (c).

Evidence merely indicative of an improbability that the testator intended to benefit certain persons is inadmissible unless a ground for that evidence is first made by proving that there is some other class which might possibly take under the description (d).

(p) Such evidence must not amount to direct evidence of the testator's intention; for example, evidence that by a mistake of the draftsman a name has been omitted or changed would be inadmissible for this purpose; see pp. 635, 636, ante.

Hiscocks v. Hiscocks* (1839), 5 M. & W. 363, per Lord ABINGER, C.B., at p. 368). It seems, however, that this type of evidence should not be relied upon where there is sufficient evidence of other circumstances to render the will intelligible; see Camoy's (Lord) v. Blundell (1848), 1 H. L. Cas. 778, 785; S. C., sub nom. Blundell v. Gladstone (1841), 11 Sim. 467, 470, 486; compare pp. 637, 638, ante.

1246. Where after the admission of the evidence of the material circumstances the language of the testator remains ambiguous or obscure, then, except in the case of equivocation (e), no further evidence, whether of the testator's intention or a mistake in the description or of a mistake in copying the will or otherwise, is admissible (f), and the gift may be void for uncertainty (g).

1247. In cases where it is shown that from some of the circumstances admitted in evidence (h) there is an equivocation (i) in the description of some person or thing, and that evidence of the surrounding circumstances is insufficient to resolve the ambiguity (k),

Thus, declarations by the testator as to the persons or property he meant to include under a particular description, or expressions of testamentary intentions in favour of particular persons who might be so described, are inadmissible (Willis v. Lucas (1718), 10 Mod. Rep. 416, 417; Andrews v. Dobson (1788), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 425; Doe d. Hiscocks v. Hiscocks (1839), 5 M. & W. 363; Martin v. Drinkwater (1840), 2 Beav. 215, 218; *Doe d. Jo. 310; see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., pp. 268, 269), and extrinsic evidence is not admitted to show that by the legacy the testator intended to release the debt (Re Tinline, Elder v. Tinline, supra; Selwin v. Bronon (1835), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 607), although such evidence may be omitted, not to show such intention, but to show some extraneous act constituting a release apart from the will (Cross v. Sprigg (1849), 6 Hare, 552; S. C. on appeal (1850), 2 Mac. & G. 113; Peace v. Hains (1853), 11 Hare, 151, 154). In a court of probate, on the other hand, in cases where the question relates to the factum of the will, such evidence is admissible in a doubtful or ambiguous case, at all events if the declarations were made before the will (Doe d. Ellis v. Hardy (1836), 1 Mood. & R. 525; Doe d. Shallcross v. Palmer (1851), 16 Q. B. 747).

Watson* (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 787; Re Stephenson, Donaldson v. Bamber, [1897] 1 Ch. 75, C. A. R. 313 (charitable gift, where the conversations with solicitor preparing will were excluded); see title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., p. 156).

(h) The fact that, if the description is by name, the equivocation is shown on the face of the will, does not exclude the rule (Doe d. Gord v. Needs (1836), 2 M. & W. 129, 141, following Doe d. Morgan v. Morgan (1832), 1 Cr. & M. 235).

then evidence has been admitted to prove the testator's declarations of his intention as to which of the persons and things so described was meant by him (l).

An equivocation in this sense arises when the description in the will, considered in the light of the context, is on the face of it apt to describe and determine, unambiguously and without obscurity at the time when the subject is to be ascertained (m), any of two or

J. (CH.) 434; Jefferies v. Michell (1855), 20 Beav. 15; Phillips v. Barker (1853), 1 Sm. & G. 583; Re Kilvert's Trusts (1871), 7 Ch. App. 170, it appears that the only evidence in fact admitted was evidence of the circumstances of the testator and donee, and not evidence of declarations of the testator, or other evidence of his intention. In Reynolds v. Whelan, supra, on appeal (not reported), it is said that the evidence of intention was considered conclusive; see Re Feltham's (Bridget) Will Trusts (1855), 1 K. & J. 528, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 532. Evidence of the surrounding circumstances in such a case includes evidence of the intimacy of the testator with the various claimants, the presumption being that the testator intended that person whom he knew best; see p. 671, post.

Slattery* (1887), 19 L. R. Ir. 177; see also A.-G. v. Hudson (1720), 1 P. Wms. 674; compare Re Jeffery, Nussey v. Jeffery, [1914] 1 Ch. 375; and the cases in note (o), p. 645, post, where inaccuracies occurred. The rule is also stated in dicta in the following cases, namely: Cheyney's (Lord) Case (1591), 5 Co. Rep. 68 a, 68 b, per WRAY and ANDERSON, C.J.J., citing Peynel v. Peynel (1373), Y. B. 47 Edw. 3, 16 b; Lansdown's (Lord) Case (1712), 10 Mod. Rep. 96, 100; Doe d. Hiscocks v. Hiscocks (1839), 5 M. & W. 363, per Lord ABINGER, C.B., at p. 368; Re Kilvert's Trusts, supra, per JAMES, L.J., at p. 173; Charter v. Charter (1874), L. R. 7 H. L. 364, per Lord CHELMSFORD, at p. 370, and Lord CAWNS, L.C., at p. 377. Some of the above decisions and dicta were considered in Bennett v. Marshall (1856), 2 K. & J. 740, where, however, the character of the parol evidence held admissible is not stated. In Re Mayo, Chester v. Keirl, [1901] 1 Ch. 404, FARWELL, J., at p. 406, said that the Court of Appeal might some time have to determine how far the cases allowing such evidence of intention are consistent with the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26); see also Wigram, Extrinsic Evidence, 3rd ed., p. 101, Proposition VI.; and as to the cases where the rule has been stated in relation to the interpretation of instruments inter vivos, see title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 454.

(m) As to the rules of construction relating to the time for ascertaining the property given, see p. 691, post; and for ascertaining the donee, p. 713, post. It has been held that where a donee is described by name, and there has been a person in existence known to the testator answering to the exact description of the donee, while at the date of the will or of the death of the testator there is no such person, parol evidence is admissible to prove not only the testator's intimacy with a person who exists to whom a sufficient part of the description is applicable, but even his intention to make the gift to that person (Re Halston, Ewen v. Halston, [1912] 1 Ch. 435, not following Re Ely, Tottenham v. Ely (1891), 65 L. T. 452, as being disapproved by FARWELL, J., in Re Ofner, Samuel v. Ofner, [1909] 1 Ch. 60, 63, C. A., and following Re Blackman (1852), 16 Beav. 377). In Re Ely, Tottenham v. Ely, supra, the evidence relied on merely went to prove intention, and was held inadmissible as such; it is submitted that the disapproval of FARWELL, J., of the decision in this case did not extend to the ratio decidendi (see Re Mayo, Chester v. Keirl, supra, at p. 406); but that it was meant that the case ought to have been decided otherwise on evidence, properly admissible, of more different subjects, either accurately (n) or subject to inaccuracies which are blanks in the description or which have to be rejected as a false description not applying to anyone (o) or are otherwise negligible (p). An equivocation does not arise where part of the description applies to one subject and another part to another subject (q); or in cases where from the context of the whole will (r), or by the aid of any canon of construction applicable to the will (s), the surrounding circumstances, including the knowledge of the testator as to the death of the person described; see In the Will of Loughlin, Acheson v. O'Meara, [1906] Victorian Law Reports, 597, 601, 603, where Re Ely, Tottenham v. Ely (1891), 65 L. T. 452, is explained. In Stringer v. Gardiner (1859), 4 De G. & J. 468, the case was decided on "such part of the evidence as is admissible," and the evidence of intention was not alluded to. In this respect Re Blackman (1852), 16 Beav. 377, and Re Halston, Ewen v. Halston, [1912] 1 Ch. 435, are difficult to reconcile with Doe d. Hiscocks v. Hiscocks (1839), 5 M. & W. 363, and other cases where evidence of intention was excluded; see note (f), p. 643, ante.

(n) Where the donee is described by a christian name, and there are found two persons, one having that name only, and the other having that name with others, this has been treated as an accurate description under this rule, and an equivocation has been held to arise (Bennett v. Marshall (1856), 2 K. & J. 740; Re Wolverton Mortgaged Estates (1877), 7 Ch. D. 197, 199, where, however, the decision is also sufficiently grounded on evidence of material circumstances; and see Re Halston, Ewen v. Halston, supra).

(o) Price v. Page (1799), 4 Ves. 679 (blank); Still v. Hoste (1821), Madd. & G. 192 (name wrong); Careless v. Careless (1816), 1 Mer. 388 ("to Robert C. my nephew the son of Joseph C.," the testator having two nephews Robert, and no brother Joseph). These three cases were explained in Doe d. Hiscocks v. Hiscocks, supra, per Lord ARINGER, C.B., at p. 70, the inaccurate part of the description being either a mere blank or applicable to no person at all; see also Garner v. Garner (1860), 29 Beav. 114 (a settlement on "J. G. of S., and E. his wife," there being a J. G. of B. whose wife's name was E., a niece of the settlor; and a J. G. of S., whose wife was H.); In the Estate of Hubbuck, [1905] P. 129 ("my granddaughter," there being three).

(r) Doe d. Westlake v. Westlake (1820), 4 B. & Ald. 57 (to "M. W. my brother and S. W. my brother's son," there being two persons S. W., sons of brothers of the testator).

(s) In Webber v. Corbett (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 515, one of the persons was described clearly in another part of the will, and the presumption as to repeated words (see p. 681, post) was applied; compare Healy v. Healy (1875), 9 I. R. Eq. 418. In Doe d. Morgan v. Morgan (1832), 1 Cr. & M. 235, a similar case, this presumption was not alluded to, and evidence of intention was admitted; and in Phelan v. Slattery (1887), 19 L. R. Ir. 177, it was excluded by the context, and evidence of intention was admitted. In Re Fish, Ingham v. Rayner, [1894] 2 Ch. 83, C. A., one of the persons claiming was illegitimate; the presumption as to legitimacy (see p. 735, post) was applied, and evidence of intention was excluded. In In the Goods of Ashlon, [1892] P. 83, this presumption was excluded by the terms of the will; the description was accordingly held applicable to both the legitimate and illegitimate claimants, and evidence of intention was held admissible. In Grant v. Grant (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 380, 727, Ex. Ch., where the devise was to "my nephew J. G.," and the testator had both a nephew and a nephew by affinity of that name, evidence was held admissible to show the relation in which they respectively stood to the or from the circumstances of the case properly admissible in evidence (b), it can be gathered which of the different subjects was intended: nor does it arise in cases where the description is on the face of it indefinite, and not apt to determine any subject, as, for example, in a devise to "one of the sons of a named person," who has more than one son; in the last-mentioned cases no evidence is admissible to resolve the patent ambiguity (a).

The declarations of the testator with regard to his intention need not be contemporaneous with the will, but may be of prior or of later date; and may have more or less weight according to the time and circumstances under which they were made (b).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Evidence to Aid Construction apart from Identification.

Difficulties of construction.

1248. The court construes the whole will by the light of the knowledge of words and expressions, evidence to explain which may have been admitted, and of the persons and things described by the will and the facts and circumstances there mentioned which have been identified by the evidence of the material circumstances (c); but evidence is not admitted to enable the court to construe a will where the words themselves require no interpretation, but the difficulty is only in the construction of the sentence in which the words occur (d).

in doubt not one of description.

Where, therefore, the matter in doubt does not relate to the persons and things described by the will, then even though it can testator, and that he did not know of the existence of the former, but without reference to the evidence of intention, the question of admissibility of which was not decided. In Wells v. Wells (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 504, JESSEL, M.R., at p. 506, and in Merrill v. Morton (1881), 17 Ch. D. 382, MALINS, V.-C., at p. 386, dissented from Grant v. Grant (1870), L. R. 6 C. P. 380, 727, Ex. Ch., on the question of the meaning of "nephew," as not being given its ordinary sense; see, however, In the Goods of Ashton, [1892] 1 P. 83, per JEUNE, J., at pp. 86, 87; Re Fish, Ingham v. Rayner, [1894] 2 Ch. 83. C. A., per A. L. SMITH, L.J., at p. 87. As to the general rule with regard to the ordinary meaning of words, see p. 655, post; and with regard to relationships, p. 739, post.

(i) Douglas v. Fellows (1853), Kay, 114, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 120, citing Fox v. Collins (1761), 2 Eden, 107 (bequest to "the said A. C.," there being two of the name mentioned in the will); Re Cheadle, Bishop v. Holt, [1900] 2 Ch. 620, C. A. (bequest of "my 140 shares," where testatrix had 240 partly paid and forty fully paid).

(c) Thus, a gift "to A. or B." where A. and B. represent persons ascertained by description, cannot be construed until it is known who A. and B. respectively are, and in what relation, if any, the persons represented by B. stand to those represented by A., so as to be able to supply what is the contingency to be understood as involved in the word "or" (Re Roberts, Percival v. Roberts, [1903] 2 Ch. 200, per JOYCE, J., at p. 203; Re Sibley's Trusts (1877), 5 Ch. D. 494, 499; see p. 728, post).

(d) Higgins v. Dawson, [1902] A. C. 1, 10, 11; Smith v. Conder (1878), 9 Ch. D. 170, 172. As, for instance, to prove to which of two antecedents a given relative pronoun was intended to refer (Castledon v. Turner (1745), 3 Atk. 257; see note (e), p. 655, post); or to rebut a presumption which arises from the construction of words simply quod words (Coote v. Boyd, Coote v. Coote (1789), 2 Bro. C. C. 521, per Lord THURLOW, L.C., at p. 526).

be shown by evidence that the intention of the testator was different from that shown by the language of the will, the language of the will, if clear, must settle the rights of the parties (c).

Where the meaning of the will is ambiguous, or there is a question of construction of an executory trust (f), the court, for the purpose of construction generally, resorts to the surrounding circumstances as a help in ascertaining the meaning, and places itself in the testator's position, in order to avoid attributing to him a capricious or unreasonable intention (g).

1249. Although, as a general rule, the interpretations put upon a will by the parties claiming under it are irrelevant (h), yet in the case of ancient wills the court may consider the contemporary or modern usage of persons acting under the will as explaining its terms, on the ground that it is to be presumed that persons who were concerned have not been committing a breach of trust from the commencement to the present time (i); but this is done only in cases where the meaning is doubtful (k).

1250. In construing wills, the events which might possibly have happened after the date of the will are to be considered as well as those which did happen (l); but the ascertainment of the testator's intention shown by the will cannot be varied by events which occur afterwards (m).

1251. Where the words of the will aided by evidence of the material facts of the case, or evidence of his intention where admissible under the above rules (n), are insufficient to determine the testator's meaning, no evidence is admissible to prove or explain what the testator intended(o); and the gift is void for uncertainty(p).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Evidence of Obligations of the Donee.

1252. In certain cases evidence is admissible to prove matters not disclosed by the will, which are binding on a donee under an express or implied undertaking on his part, made with the testator. Thus, where a gift in a will is either absolute(q) or upon trusts or conditions not disclosed by the will(r), and it can be proved(s) that either before(t) or after(a) the date of the will, during the testator's lifetime(b), the donee received from the testator a communication of certain trusts or conditions to be attached to the gift and to be binding on the donee(c), and that the donee accepted the gift on those trusts and conditions, either by his express agreement or by his silence(d), and thereby

A.; and see Johnson v. Ball (1851), 5 De G. & Sm. 85, explained in Re Fleetwood, Sidgreaves v. Brewer, supra, at pp. 603, 604).

(s) The trusts and conditions may be established either on the confession of the donee (Re Maddock, Llewelyn v. Washington, [1902] 2 Ch. 220, C. A.; Re Huxtable, Huxtable v. Crawford, supra), or against him by evidence aliunde (Podmore v. Gunning (1836), 7 Sim. 644); but in all cases the evidence must show conduct of the donee showing acceptance (French v. French, [1902] 1 I. R. 172, H. L.; Re Gardom, Le Page v. A.-G., [1914] 1 Ch. 663, C. A.).

(d) The acceptance may be made expressly or silently, as where the donee does not dissent on the communication being made to him (Russell v. Jackson (1852), 10 Hare, 204; Moss v. Cooper, supra, at pp. 370, 371); but in the latter case the evidence of acceptance must leave no doubt in the mind of the tribunal (French v. French, supra, at p. 213); as to acceptance by conduct, compare title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., pp. 350, 351 (formation of a contract). It has been said that the doctrine should not be applied to the case of a person who has shown no complicity in getting the will made and who, upon the first communication which he received on the subject, sought to induce the testator to make a different arrangement; see McCormick v. Grogan (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 82, per Lord HATHERLEY, L.C., at p. 93.

induced the testator to make the gift, or to leave the gift already made unrevoked, then evidence of these trusts or conditions is admissible, except in so far as such evidence would contradict the will (e).

In such cases evidence is admitted, not as completing the incomplete will of the testator, or otherwise showing his intention (f), but as evidence of the obligation accepted by and binding on the donee (g), and is admitted only to prevent fraud on his part (h); such obligation in some cases may make the donee a trustee (i).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Evidence to Support and Rebut Presumptions of Fact.

1253. In cases where according to equitable doctrines a presumption on an inference from the facts of the case is raised (k), as in the case of the presumptions against double portions, or with respect to satisfaction of portions by legacies and of legacies by portions (l), parol evidence is admissible to repel the presumption, and counter-evidence is then admissible to support it (m). Where,

(f) Burney v. Macdonald (1845), 15 Sim. 6, where SHADWELL, V.-C., at p. 12, said that he could not look at certain letters signed by devisees either as testamentary instruments or as evidence of the testator's intention: they were extrinsic to the will, and expressed, not his will, but theirs. In cases where the evidence proves a secret trust, the beneficiaries under the trust do not take under the will, but under the trust (O'Brien v. Condon, supra); but the effect may be to compel the trustee to give effect to the secret trust as if the property therein comprised had been specifically bequeathed by the will to the cestui que trust (Re Maddock, Dlewelyn v. Washington, [1902] 2 Ch. 220, C. A.).

(g) Re Spencer's Will (1887), 57 L. T. 519, 521, C. A. It is accordingly essential to show the communication of the trust or condition by the donee and acceptance by him (*Jones v. D. 615, 625). A test in such cases is, therefore, to consider the case as unaffected by the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 8) or the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), and then to inquire whether a trust or obligation has been imposed by the testator and accepted by the donee in such a way that a court of equity would enforce it as binding on the donee (Jones v. Badley, supra, per Lord CAIRNS, L.C., at p. 364).

(i) See, generally, title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES, p. 21, ante. As to the cases where such evidence of acceptance by one of several donees, taking concurrently, makes the other donees trustees, see ibid., p. 22, ante.

(k) Hawkins, Wills, 2nd ed., Preface, p. ix, explains that these anomalous cases arose on account of the equitable doctrines in question being derived from the civil law, where parol evidence of intention to rebut inferences from rules of construction was admissible. In all cases the rules appear to be presumptions of fact, and not to arise out of the words of the will; see note (n), p. 650, post.

however, the presumptions arise from the construction of the words of the will simply, no evidence can be admitted (n), nor is evidence admissible to raise such a presumption of fact (o). Such evidence is allowed, not as altering the will or proving the testamentary intention, but as proving some personal obligation on the part of the donee binding on his conscience (p), or as explaining acts and events taking place outside the will (q). Similarly, evidence is admissible to rebut, or to support when rebutted, resulting or constructive trusts (r), or the claims of an executor to a residue undisposed of as against the Crown (s) but not as against the next of kin (t).

to gift to executor.

1254. Where a testator has expressed, outside his will, the intention of forgiving a debt, or making a gift of personal estate belonging to him, to one who upon his death becomes his executor, the intention meanwhile continuing unchanged, the executor is, it seems, entitled to hold the property for his own benefit, and the court has admitted extrinsic evidence of the intention (a); but this rule is not to be extended further, as, for example, to a mere promise to give on a future occasion (b).

SECT. 3.—General Principles of Construction.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Intention Collected from the Will taken as a Whole.

1257. The only principle of construction which is applicable without qualification to all wills (n), and overrides every other rule of construction, is as follows:—The intention of the testator is collected from a consideration of the whole will (o) taken in connection with any evidence properly admissible (p), and the meaning of the will and of every part of it is determined according to that intention (q).

Whitley* (1857), 7 De G. M. & G. 490, per Lord Cranworth, L.C., at p. 495, giving as an instance the case of a gift to the children of a particular person where there are no children, but grandchildren; see note (m), p. 744, post).

1258. A will is, as a rule, generally construed as the court would construe any other document (r), subject to this, that if the intention is shown, the mode of expression of that intention (s) and the form and language of the will are unimportant. Thus, the want of the technical words which are necessary in some instruments for the purpose of giving expression to intention (t), or any error in grammar (u), or the want or inaccuracy of punctuation marks, is then immaterial (w); in all such cases a benevolent construction is adopted (a). The skill in drafting shown by the will is considered (b).

1259. For the purpose of ascertaining the intention the will is read, in the first place, without reference to or regard to the consequences of any rule of law or canon of construction (c).

devisor expressed in his will is the best expositor, director and disposer of his words"); Doe d. Long v. Laming (1760), 2 Burr. 1100, 1112. As to the general rule relating to intention, see p. 626, ante. "The intention, when legitimately proved, is competent not only to fix the sense of ambiguous words, but to control the sense even of clear words and to supply the place of express words, in cases of difficulty or ambiguity" (Re Haygarth, Wickham v. Haygarth, [1913] 2 Ch. 9, per JOYCE, J., at p. 15, citing Hawkins, Wills, 2nd ed., p. 6; Re Patterson, Dunlop v. Greer, [1899] 1 I. R. 324).

Warren* (1861), 9 H. L. Cas. 420, 427). At the same time, one must not divorce language from its ordinary meaning by introducing a mere suggestion of false grammar (Gorringe v. Mahlestedt, [1907] A. C. 225, 227).

Edgeworth* (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 35, 41; Re Speakman, Unsworth v. Speakman (1876), 4 Ch. D. 620, 625). The testator is then considered to be inops consilii (Lewis v. Rees (1856), 3 K. & J. 132, 146, 147).

(b) The fact that the will shows that it was drawn by the testator himself or by a skilled lawyer on his behalf is considered (Richards v. Davies (1863), 13 C. B. (N. S.) 69, 86, 861, Ex. Ch.; Re Dayrell, Hastie v. Dayrell, [1904] 2 Ch. 496, 499); and the fact may guide the court as to the force to be given to technical words (Thellusson v. Rendlesham (Lord), Thellusson v. Thellusson, Hare v. Roberts (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 429, 486, 490, 498, 504); a testator who is inops consilii will be supposed to use words in a popular and not in a legal sense (Forth v. Chapman (1720), 1 P. Wms. 663, 666); but in all cases the principles of construction which are applicable are the same (Weale v. Ollive (No. 2) (1863), 32 Beav. 421, 423).

(c) Hodgson v. Ambrose (1780), 1 Doug. (K. B.) 337, 341; Scarborough (Earl) v. Doe d. Savile (1836), 3 Ad. & El. 897, 963, Ex. Ch.; De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir (1852), 3 H. L. Cas. 524, per Lord St. LEONARDS, L.C., at p. 545; Macpherson v. Stewart (1858), 28 L. J. (CH.) 177; Green v. Gascogne

Words are given that meaning which is rendered necessary in the circumstances of the case by the context of the whole will (d), the particular passage concerned being taken together with whatever is relevant in the rest of the will to explain it (e). The will itself is taken as the dictionary from which the meaning of the words is ascertained (f), however inaccurate such meaning would be in ordinary or legal use (g). The only qualification on this application of the general principle is that a clear context is required in order to exclude the usual meaning of a word (h). Relative terms and other terms needing a context to make them intelligible can only be explained by the context (i).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Scope of the Will Considered in Doubtful Cases.

1260. In cases where, in applying the last rule, a context is found which is sufficient to control the meaning of the words, but the words in such context are ambiguous, contradictory, or obscure, or where the words have no special meaning given them by the context, but have two or more meanings in ordinary use (k), the court adopts that construction which it considers that the testator, in the circumstances of the case, probably meant by the words of Edwards*, [1909] A. C. 275, 277. The rules of law are applied to the intention thus collected in order to see whether the court is at liberty to carry that intention into effect (De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir (1852), 3 H. L. Cas. 524, 545). A void limitation may be referred to in explanation of the testator's intention (Martin v. Martin (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 404, 411 (but as to the rule of law stated in this case, see note (m), p. 831, post); Re Wright, Mott v. Issott, [1907] 1 Ch. 231). It has been suggested, however, that less weight may be given to an indication in an inoperative clause (Re Watkins, Maybery v. Lightfoot (1913), 108 L. T. 237, 239, C. A. (reversed, sub nom. Lightfoot v. Maybery, [1914] W. N. 180, H. L.), as explained in Re Johnson, Pitt v. Johnson (1913), 30 T. L. R. 200, affirmed (1914), 30 T. L. R. 605, C. A.).

the will (l), taking into account the general scope of the will and the general purpose of the testator (m).

The construction is not decided on mere conjecture or belief (n), but on judicial persuasion (o) of what is the intention of the testator, either expressly declared or collected by just reasoning upon the words of the will or evidenced by the surrounding circumstances where they can be called in aid (p).

Inferences
of will.

1261. The court makes any reasonable inference from a particular passage, comparing that inference with what is apparent in other parts of the will (q). This power of inference, however, is limited; a general intention not carried out by some appropriate words in the will itself cannot give the court the right to place the words there for the testator (r), and a priori reasoning upon what the testator would naturally intend cannot be allowed to weigh against the proper construction of the words used (s).

Reconcilment of parts
of will.

1262. Where the language of the will is conflicting, the court attempts to reconcile successive provisions of the will without unduly straining its language and to make the whole consistent with the apparent general intention of the testator (t).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Words prima facie to be Given their Usual Sense.

SECT. 3.

General Principles of Construction.

Words given their usual sense.

1263. It is a general rule (a) that, subject to the foregoing rules (b), words are to be first read, in the case of ordinary words in their grammatical and ordinary sense (c), and in the case of legal and technical words in their legal and technical sense (d), and the usual rules of grammar are to be applied (e).

(a) "A rule of universal application, which admits of no exception, and which ought never under any circumstances to be departed from" (Es Crawford's Trusts (1854), 2 Drew. 230, per KINDERSLEY, V.-C., at p. 230; Southgate v. Clinch (1858), 4 Jur. (N. S.) 428, 429). "The most general of rules; a general rule of great utility" (Gether v. Capper (1855), 24 L. J. (C. P.) 69, 71). The rule applies to all wills (Smith v. Butcher (1878), 10 Ch. D. 113, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 116). The rule comes from the Digest: Non aliter a significatione verborum recedi oportet quam cum manifestum est aliud sensisse testatorem (Marcellus in Dig., lib. 32, tit. 1, s. 69, cited in Lowe v. Thomas (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 315, 317, C. A.).

(b) Hamilton v. Ritchie, [1894] A. C. 310, per Lord WATSON, at p. 313 ("unless the context of the instrument shows" etc.); and see Gordon v. Gordon (1871), L. R. 5 H. L. 254, per Lord CHELMSFORD, at p. 271 ("unless other parts of the will or the general scope and object of it" etc.). The rule as to giving the ordinary meaning to a word is thus not a hard and fast rule, since it is entirely subservient to the context of the will; see Seale-Hayne v. Jodrell, [1891] A. C. 304, per Lord HERSHELL, at p. 306. It has been said that the rule of construction, as enunciated in the cases cited in note (i), p. 656, post, deals only with the case of giving to words a meaning which they do not properly bear (Cave v. Horsell, [1912] 3 K. B. 533, C. A., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 543); and again that it speaks not of the meaning of a word, but of a sentence, of a series of limitations in a will (ibid., per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 544); and that where a word has two proper and recognised meanings, the rule must be greatly modified, even if it applies at all, and that in such cases the sense of a word in a particular passage must be decided by the context and the surrounding circumstances (ibid., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 543). It is submitted that these criticisms are met by stating the rule as in the text, supra. A word not in its ordinary meaning a technical word may have several senses and be used in one of them, in which it is technical (Clayton v. Gregson (1836), 5 Ad. & El. 302, 308).

(c) Thellusson v. Woodford, Woodford v. Thellusson (1799), 4 Ves. 227, per ARDEN, M.R., at p. 329, adopted in Villur v. Gilbey, [1907] A. C. 139, per Lord ATKINSON, at p. 147; Poole v. Poole (1804), 3 Bos. & P. 620, 627; Church v. Mundy (1808), 15 Ves. 396, 406; Trevor v. Trevor (1847), 1 H. L. Cas. 239, 264, 266, 267, 270; Williams v. Lewis (1859), 6 H. L. Cas. 1013, 1023; De Windt v. De Windt (1866), L. R. 1 H. L. 87, 92; Gibbons v. Gibbons (1881), 6 App. Cas. 471, 479, P. C.; Hamilton v. Ritchie, supra, at p. 313; Higgins v. Dawson, [1902] A. C. 1, 12; Gorringe v. Muhlstedt, [1907] A. C. 225, 227. The rule has been enunciated in a very large number of cases, and is sometimes described as the "golden" rule; it is applicable to all kinds of instruments; see Re Levy, Ex parte Walton (1881), 17 Ch. D. 746, 751, C. A.; Caledonian Rail. Co. v. North British Rail. Co. (1881), 6 App. Cas. 114, 131; Spencer v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1882), 22 Ch. D. 142, 148, C. A.; and title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., pp. 434 et seq.

(d) Aumble v. Jones (1709), 1 Salk. 238; Buck d. Whalley v. Nurton (1797), 1 Bos. & P. 53, 57; Jesson v. Wright (1820), 2 Bli. 1, 57, H. L.; Roddy v. Fitzgerald (1858), 6 H. L. Cas. 823; Giles v. Melsom (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 24, 31; Van Grutten v. Foxwell, Foxwell v. Van Grutten, [1897] A. C. 658, 672, 684; Re Keane's Estate, [1903] 1 I. R. 215; Re Simcoe, Vowler-Simcoe v. Vowler, [1913] 1 Ch. 552, 557.

(e) Re Harrison, Turner v. Hellard (1885), 30 Ch. D. 390, 393, C. A. Thus, relative pronouns and other relative expressions are prima facie referable to the last antecedent (Castledon v. Turner (1746), 3 Atk. 257; Adshhead v. Willetts (1861), 29 Beav. 358, 361; Re Williams, Gregory v. Muirhead (1913), 134 L. T. Jo. 619). For an example to the contrary, struction.

When usual sense of words adhered to.

Where the words so interpreted are sensible in reference to the surrounding circumstances (f), that is to say, where these circumstances do not deprive the words of all reasonable application when so interpreted (g), this sense of the words must be adhered to (h); but where that course would lead to some absurdity or some repugnance or inconsistency with the declared intentions of the testator, collected from the whole of the will, the grammatical and ordinary or the technical sense of the words may be modified, so as to avoid that absurdity or inconsistency, but no further (i). In particular, to deprive words of their appropriate usual sense there must be sufficient to satisfy a judicial mind that they were meant to be used by the testator in some other sense, and to show what that other sense is (k), and the burden of proof lies on those who attribute to the words such other sense (l).

context and circumstances in excluding rule.

1264. There are, however, few words, if indeed there are any, which bear a meaning so exact that the reader can disregard the surrounding circumstances and the context in ascertaining the sense in which they are employed (m). If, therefore, the intention of the testator can be collected with reasonable certainty from the whole will, with the aid of extrinsic evidence of a kind properly admissible, that intention must have effect given to it beyond and even against the literal or ordinary sense of particular words and see Fox v. Collins (1761), 2 Eden, 107. The construction of a will may thus be a question for a grammarian rather than for a lawyer (Fenny d. Collings v. Ewestace (1815), 4 M. & S. 58, 60; Child v. Elsworth (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 679, 683, C. A.).

It has been observed that this statement of the rule seemed to be involved in the above statement as to context, and to be but a means of showing by the context that the words were not used in their ordinary sense (Thellusson v. Rendlesham (Lord), Thellusson v. Thellusson, Hare v. Roberts, supra, per Lord CRANWORTH, at p. 494; Rhodes v. Rhodes (1882), 7 App. Cas. 192, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 205); and that by "an absurdity" could hardly be meant a result which the court thought ought not to have been the intention of the testator (Rhodes v. Rhodes, supra, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 205; see also Long v. Lane (1886), 17 L. R. Ir. 24, 35, C. A.).

expressions, and the court is not bound to adhere to the ordinary or legal meaning in such a case (n).

1265. The meaning of technical terms, excluding technical terms of English law, but including technical terms of foreign law or of science or art, is determined by evidence of experts (o).

The questions what are technical terms in English law and what are their technical meanings (p) are determined by the court with the aid, in certain cases, of the established canons of construction; in considering a technically drawn will, the Court regards the practice of conveyancers as not wholly irrelevant though not binding (q).

1266. The ordinary meaning of a word is the meaning given it by the ordinary usage of society (r), that is to say, the testator's society, of that class and period in which he lived and moved (s). If, therefore, the testator belonged to a district, trade, or business in which a particular word has a certain meaning given to it by an existing custom, then the ordinary meaning of the word under the rule is this customary meaning, and not the meaning generally given to it by the general English usage (t).

The question whether a word has a customary meaning is one of fact, for the jury, if any (Simpson v. Margison (1847), 11 Q. B. 23, 32). Evidence as to ordinary meaning.

Previous cases as to ordinary meaning.

Examples.

The ordinary meaning of a word is not necessarily the etymological meaning (u), though there may be cases where the court refers to the etymological meaning of a word as a guide (a).

Where no specific meaning is unambiguously given to a word by the context (b), the court may consult dictionaries of good reputation (c) and may receive evidence of the meaning ordinarily given to the word (d).

1267. The ordinary meaning, and therefore legal interpretation, of words may vary from time to time according to the usages of the community (e); and there are often many meanings applied in common use to any given word (f). Accordingly, it has been frequently a matter for judicial decision in the construction of wills and other documents what is, or was, at a given time the ordinary meaning of a particular word, or the secondary meanings which are or were capable of being given to it.

1268. Amongst the words and expressions of common use in wills, the meaning of which in common use, or as affected by various contexts, has been the subject of judicial determination (g), are the following (h), namely: "entitled" (i), "marriage" (k), "minority" (l), (u) Shore v. Wilson, Hewley's (Lady) Charities (1842), 9 Cl. & Fin. 355, 527, H. L.

(a) Parr v. Parr (1833), 1 My. & K. 647, 648 ("devolve").

(c) The court is not bound by the dictionary; see Grievous v. Rawley (1852), 10 Hare, 63, 65; Re Feeney, Inglis v. Birmingham Corporation (1908), 24 T. L. R. 314.

D. 672, JESSEL, M.R., at p. 674, said that "every word which has more than one meaning has a primary meaning, and if it has a primary meaning, you want a context to find another"; as to such cases see, further, note (b), p. 655, ante.

(g) As to how far such decisions are followed, see Re Rayner, Rayner v. Rayner, supra; Re Athill, Athill v. Athill (1880), 16 Ch. D. 211, C. A., per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 223.

(h) For other examples, in the case of words describing donees or property, see pp. 699, 744, post.

(k) The word primâ facie refers to a marriage valid in law (Falkland (Viscount) v. Bertie (1897), 2 Vern. 333, 336; In the Estate of M'Loughlin (1878), 1 L. R. Ir. 421, C. A.; Allen v. Wood (1834), 1 Bing. (N. C.) 8).

(l) The word primâ facie refers to the period under twenty-one years of age (Maddison v. Chapman (1858), 4 K. & J. 709, 724), but may refer to a conventional minority, as, for instance, up to twenty-five years of age, or the time during which the testator has kept the child out of full control of his property (Milroy v. Milroy (1844), 14 Sim. 48; Fraser v. Fraser (1863), 1 New Rep. 439).

"testamentary expenses" or "executorship expenses" (m), "unmarried" (n).

of Construction.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Every Word, if possible, to have its Effect.

every word.

1269. Subject to the preceding rules, the will should be so construed that every word should have its effect (o). The court has no right to disregard a word, if some meaning can be given to it (p), and that meaning is not contrary to some intention plainly expressed in other parts of the will (q); and the court does not as a rule impute to the testator that he uses additional words without some additional purpose or without any purpose at all (r).

(m) These terms are ordinarily synonymous (Sharp v. Lush (1879), 10 Ch. D. 468, 470) denoting the expenses incident to the proper performance of the duty of the executor (ibid.), as to which see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., pp. 240 et seq. Costs in proceedings properly brought to administer the testator's estate are included (Morrell v. Fisher (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 422; Miles v. Harrison (1874), 9 Ch. App. 316; Penny v. Penny (1879), 11 Ch. D. 440) except so far as increased by the administration of the real estate (see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 350), but including costs of inquiries to determine the persons entitled to a legacy where the difficulty is caused by the language of the testator himself (Re Groom, Booty v. Groom, [1897] 2 Ch. 407). As to payments for estate duties, see Re Sharman, Wright v. Sharman, [1901] 2 Ch. 280; Porte v. Williams, [1911] 1 Ch. 188; Re Hudson, Spencer v. Turner, [1911] 1 Ch. 206; and title ESTATE AND OTHER DEATH DUTIES, Vol. XIII., pp. 219, note (i), 220, note (m); see also Broughton (Lord) Poulet (Lord William) (1855), 19 Beav. 119 (expenses of executing the trusts).

(n) The word naturally means, in the case of a bachelor or spinster (Pratt v. Mathew (1886), 22 Beav. 328), "never having been married" (Heywood v. Heywood (1860), 29 Beav. 9, 16; Re Sergeant, Mertens v. Walley (1884), 26 Ch. D. 575; Re Sanders' Trusts (1866), L. R. 1 Eq. 375; Dalrymple v. Hall (1881), 16 Ch. D. 715; *Roberts v. A.), but may mean "not having a spouse at the time contemplated in the will" (Clarke v. Colls (1861), 9 H. L. Cas. 601; Re Chant, Chant v. Lemon, [1900] 2 Ch. 345; see title SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., pp. 583, 584). As to a gift to unmarried children, see Jubber v. Jubber (1839), 9 Sim. 503; Hall v. Robertson (1853), 4 De G. SECT. 3.
General Principles
of Construction.

Rule is subject to

1270. This rule is a general rule (a), but is not inflexible (b); according to the context (a), or by reasoning from the scope of the will (b), words may be rejected (c), or may be regarded as merely explanatory, expressing what would otherwise have been true under the will (d). Further, there need be no departure made from the rule giving words their usual meaning merely because they are in that sense only surplusage (e), or because other words, inconsistent with their use in that sense but insufficient to give them any other sense, may have to be rejected (f).

construction.

1271. The court applies certain established canons of construction (g) in cases where they are respectively appropriate (h). These canons seek to lay down what inferences ought in doubtful cases to be drawn, as a general rule, from particular indications of intention (i); some more especially determine what meaning should in general be given to particular words and expressions which have acquired a technical or quasi-technical nature (k); and others at p. 614; Quarm v. Quarm, [1892] 1 Q. B. 184, 186, 189; and see Foxwell v. Van Grullen (1900), 82 L. T. 272, H. L.

(a) "The rule ought not to be departed from, unless it is apparent that by adhering to it we should be defeating the intention as collected from the context" (Sayer v. Bradley (1856), 5 H. L. Cas. 873, 899).

(t) Martin v. Holgate (1866), L. R. 1 H. L. 175, per Lord CRANWORTH, L.C., at p. 185, where the rule was encountered by another rule that "we are not to construe a gift as contingent unless the context requires us to do so"; Clarke v. Colls (1861), 9 H. L. Cas. 601, 613, 618.

The objection of surplusage has weight only when the presence of such word or phrase would be unusual or unaccountable if it were not specially inserted for the purpose of altering the meaning of the sentence (Re Boden, Boden v. Boden, [1907] 1 Ch. 132, C. A., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 143).

SECT. 3.
General Principles
of Construction.

laws.

1272. The system of canons of construction, whether English or foreign, applied by the court varies according to the circumstances and the testator's intention (m). A testator may expressly or impliedly show an intention that his meaning is to be ascertained according to some known system of jurisprudence; and such intention, if the provisions of the will and the circumstances admit, has effect given to it, irrespective of the domicile or nationality of the testator (n). Similarly, the fact that the testator uses the English language, with or without the use of technical terms borrowed from the law of England, is considered in discovering the testator's intention even when the property dealt with and the validity and effect of his dispositions of that property are affected by a foreign law (o).

Where such an intention is not expressed or inferred, the court acts upon certain presumptions (p) which define the system to be applied (q).

(1857), 6 H. L. Cas. 61, 79; Greville v. Browne (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 689, 703; Re Bawden, National Provincial Bank of England v. Cresswell, Bawden v. Cresswell, [1894] 1 Ch. 693, per KEKEWICH, J., at pp. 697, 698 ("the dictionary is to be found in those decisions"); Barraclough v. Oooper (1905), [1908] 2 Ch. 121, n., 124, H. L.

(l) Re Jodrell, Jodrell, v. Seale (1890), 44 Ch. D. 590, 610, C. A. (previous cases useful "when they put an interpretation on common forms"). As, for instance, the rule in Andrews v. Partington (1791), 3 Bro. C. C. 401 (see p. 718, post), which is grounded on the inconsistency of the directions in the will (see note (b), p. 719, post); and the rule in Wild's Case (1599), 6 Co. Rep. 16 b, 17 a; see p. 787, post.

(m) The general principles of construction (see pp. 651 et seq., ante) appear to apply to all wills, whether English or foreign, as being common to every system of jurisprudence; compare Di Sora (Duchess) v. Phillippis (1863), 10 H. L. Cas. 624, 628, 629, n., 633; Re Harman, Lloyd v. Tardy, [1894] 3 Ch. 607, 611, 613.

(n) Raphael v. Boehm, Cockburn v. Raphael (1852), 22 L. J. (CH.) 299 (testator domiciled in India disposing of movables by express reference to the law of inheritance in Great Britain); Bradford v. Young (1883), 29 Ch. D. 617, 623, 625, C. A.; Re Price, Tomlin v. Latter, [1900] 1 Ch. 442, 453; see title CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., p. 230.

(o) See Studd v. Cook (1883), 8 App. Cas. 577, 593, 600, 601; Re Baker's Settlement Trusts, Hunt v. Baker, [1908] W. N. 161; Re Bonnefoi, Surrey v. Perrin, [1912] P. 233, 238, 239, C. A. But the doctrines of English courts of equity are not imported into the construction of such a will (McGibbon v. Abbott (1885), 10 App. Cas. 653, 658, P. C.); see also Re Miller, Bailie v. Miller, [1914] 1 Ch. 511.

(p) The rule, for example, that a will of movables is to be construed with reference to the law of the domicile of the testator "is a mere canon of interpretation which should not be adhered to when there is any reason from the nature of the will or otherwise to suppose that the testator wrote it with reference to the law of some other country" (Dicey, Conflict of Laws, 1st ed., p. 695; 2nd ed., p. 679, adopted in Re Price, Tomlin v. Latter, supra, per STIRLING, J., at p. 452; Re D'Este's Settlement Trusts, Poultier v. D'Este, [1903] 1 Ch. 898, per BUCKLEY, J., at p. 900).

(q) As to the property disposed of, if immovable, see title CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., p. 220, and if movable, ibid., p. 230; as to the distinction between movable and immovable for this purpose, see ibid., pp. 196 et seq.; as to the wills of personal estate of British subjects and others see Wills Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114), s. 3: title CONFLICT

SECT. 3.
General Principles
of Construction.

The court may be informed of the appropriate foreign canons of construction by evidence (r).

In cases where the will is to be construed according to English rules, but is written in a foreign language, the court only looks at the effect of that language in order to ascertain what are the equivalent expressions in English (s).

Application of English
construction.

1273. The canons of construction of wills in English law are not lightly departed from in cases where they are applicable (t); but, on the other hand, are to be followed only when the testator has not clearly expressed his own intention and has not given any other guide to the court (a). All these canons therefore are of the nature of presumptions only (b), and are subject to any contrary intention (c) disclosed by the will, as construed in accordance with the principles above stated (d).

Use of words in ordinary sense.

If in particular the language of the will can be read in its ordinary and natural sense (e) so as to be sensible with respect to the surrounding circumstances, no rule or canon of construction is applicable to ascertain the intention (f), and no reliance can be placed on former decisions of the court on similar or even identical words in other wills (g).

OF LAWS, Vol. VI., p. 230. As to the ascertainment of the donees, see ibid., pp. 220, note (e), 231, notes (k), (l).

(s) Reynolds v. Kortright (1854), 18 Beav. 417, per ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 426; compare Baring v. Ashburton (1886), 54 L. T. 463.

(t) Blann v. Bell (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 775, 781, C. A.; Wake v. Varah (1876), 2 Ch. D. 348, 357, C. A.; and see note (g), p. 660, ante; A.-G. v. Jefferys, [1908] A. C. 411, 413, 414. The ground on which these rules are followed is either that certainty in judicial decisions is attained (Jesson v. Wright (1820), 2 Bli. 1, H. L., per Lord REDESDALE, at p. 56; Doe d. Clarke v. Ludlam (1831), 7 Bing. 275, 279; Morrall v. Sutton (1845), 1 Ph. 533, 536; Grey v. Pearson (1857), 6 H. L. Cas. 61, 108; Roddy v. Fitzgerald (1858), 6 H. L. Cas. 823, 884), or that the object is to make it possible to advise confidently on titles (Roddy v. Fitzgerald, supra, at p. 875), or that it is to be assumed that lawyers draw instruments according to the known state of the law, which includes these canons from time to time adopted by the court in the construction of wills, and the testator must be supposed to have used his words in the sense so fixed (Re Bowden, National Provincial Bank of England v. Cresswell, Bowden v. Cresswell, [1894] 1 Ch. 693, 697, 698; Graville v. Browne (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 689, 703; Kingsbury v. Waller, [1901] A. C. 187, 189). It has been suggested that they were invented to give effect to what is in average instances the intention of the testator (Re Inman, Inman v. Rolls, [1893] 3 Ch. 518, per KEKEWICH, J., at p. 520).

(b) It is pointed out in Lee v. Pain (1845), 4 Hare, 201, per WIGRAM, V.-C., at pp. 216, 217, that the word "presumption" in this sense is not used in a strict and accurate sense, but as denoting an inference in favour of a given construction of particular words.

1274. Certain rules, however, which affect the construction of wills of real estate, but are not true rules of construction, operate independently of and even contrary to a testator's intention—namely, the rules (h) that, except in cases where the Contingent Remainders Act, 1877 (i), is applicable, no limitation capable of taking effect as a contingent remainder is to be held to take effect as an executory devise (k); and that a class of devisees taking under such a gift must be closed at the time when the remainder takes effect (l).

SECT. 3.
General Principles
of Construction.

Certain rules applicable to real estate.

With respect to personal estate, there are no such technical rules to prevent the intention of the testator being literally carried into effect (m), where not otherwise contrary to law.

1275. Previous cases on the construction of other wills are considered by the court, particularly where the question relates to real property (n); but no weight is given to them (o), except in so far as they lay down some such canon of construction (p) applicable to the case before the court (q), or are based on reasoning which commends itself to the court.

The fact that the testator's intention as to a blended gift of real and personal estate is defeated by these rules so far as regards the real estate does not prevent effect being given to his intention as to the personal estate (*Holmes v. A.; Re Morgan, Morgan v. Morgan, supra, at p. 232; Walford v. Walford, [1912] A. C. 658, 664. It has been said that the true way to construe a will is to form an opinion apart from the cases, and then see whether the cases require a modification of that opinion; not to begin by considering how far it resembles other wills on which decisions have been given (*Re Tredwell, Jeffray v. Although the court may follow a previous decision on another will where the language was identical with or very similar to that in the will under consideration and where no real distinction exists between the cases (r), yet the mere fact of similarity of language does not bind the court to adopt a similar construction (a); the surrounding circumstances may be different in every case and may give a different meaning to the words (b), and it is the principles of construction exemplified, rather than the particular decisions themselves, that are followed (c). One judge is not bound to follow another on questions of mere verbal interpretation (d); and further, even when the established canons of construction are honestly applied, two minds may fairly differ (e).

authority; thus, in many cases, in the construction of wills of personal estate, the court follows the maxims of the civil law, which were sometimes introduced by ecclesiastical courts having jurisdiction in probate matters, including the greater part of the rules as to legacies (Monkhouse v. Holme (1783), 1 Bro. C. C. 298, 300; Hanson v. Graham (1801), 6 Ves. 239; Tudor, L. C. Real Prop., 4th ed., p. 440; Leeming v. Sherratt (1842), 2 Hare, 14, 17; *Parker v. As regards the citation of Scotch cases, they are available as authorities for the general principles of construction of wills, which are the same in both countries (Young v. Robertson (1865), 4 Macq. 314, H. L.; Hickling v. Fair, [1899] A. C. 15, 26, 36). Further, similar canons of construction in some cases exist in the two systems of jurisprudence; see Taylor v. Graham (1878), 3 App. Cas. 1287, 1293; but it cannot be said that every canon of construction in England is part of the law of Scotland (Hickling v. Fair, supra, at p. 25).

Part XIV.—Canons of Construction Applicable in Special Cases.

SECT. 1.—Canons Relating to the Scope of the Will.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Presumption against Intestacy.

1276. A testator may well intend to die partially intestate; when he makes a will, he is testate only so far as he has expressed himself in his will (f). Where, however, the construction of the will is doubtful, the court acts on the presumption that the testator did not intend to die either wholly or even partially intestate, provided that on a fair and reasonable construction there is ground for a contrary conclusion (g). In pursuance of an intention to avoid intestacy found in a will, or in pursuance of this presumption, the ordinary sense of words has often been departed from in the construction of wills (h).

The force, however, of the presumption varies according to the context and the circumstances (i).

A., per Lord ESHER, M.R., at p. 393: "There is one rule of construction, which to my mind is a golden rule, viz., that when a testator has executed a will in solemn form, you must assume that he did not intend to make it a solemn farce,—that he did not intend to die intestate when he has gone through the form of making a will." For examples of references to the leaning against intestacy in doubtful cases, see Royle v. Hamilton (1799), 4 Ves. 437, 439; Vauchamp v. Bell (1822), Madd. & G. 343, 348; *Dobson v. (h) It has been said, however, that although avoiding intestacy is thus to be regarded in construing doubtful expressions, it is not enough to induce the court to give an unnatural meaning to a word, or to construe plain words otherwise than according to their plain meaning (Re Benn, Benn v. Benn (1885), 29 Ch. D. 839, 847, C. A.; Re Edwards, Jones v. Jones, [1906] 1 Ch. 570, 574, C. A.; see Pinney v. Marriott (1863), 32 Beav. 643).

The presumption applies especially to property which the testator has got at the date of the will, but is not so strong as regards property which he has not yet acquired at that date (Re Methuen and Blore's Contract (1881), 16 Ch. D. 696, 698, 699). The inference from a devise of the whole legal fee simple of freehold land to 1277. Where the will shows an intention of the testator to dispose of the whole of his real and personal estate, but as regards the interests created the will admits of two constructions, according to one of which the will operates as a complete disposition of the whole, but according to the other the will creates a chasm, the court inclines to take the words in the former sense (k).

In cases where, according to one construction of the words of an ambiguous will, a gift would be void as illegal, and a partial intestacy would arise, this presumption is an additional (l) reason for an alternative construction avoiding that illegality (m).

1278. The presumption, however, gives no assistance to the court where the contest is not between testacy and intestacy, but between two gifts in the same will (n). Further, it is not enough to satisfy the court that intestacy was not intended (o); in order to oust the title of the persons claiming on intestacy it must be shown distinctly that there are words in the will sufficient to constitute a gift of the property in question (p), expressly or by implication, to some particular donee (q), and the burden of proof is on the alleged donee (a) to that extent (b).

It is a peremptory rule of law (c) (and not merely a rule of construction) that the heir-at-law is not to be disinherited, nor are the next of kin to be deprived of their statutory right of succession, unless by express words or necessary implication in the will, that is to say, by a will clearly and unambiguously indicating the intention of the testator to leave his property to someone else (d), in such a way that there is certainty both in the subjects and objects of the gift, and the manner in which the gift takes effect (e). A gift uncertain in any of these respects is void (f).

1279. The construction of the will is in the first place considered quite apart from the question of the legality of the provisions of the will (g). If the words of the will are plain, they cannot be struck out (h) or taken in a sense different from that which they plainly bear (i) for the purpose of escaping from the consequences of invalidity under some rule of law, or even because it appears intention of giving property to a certain extent, there is an end of the claim of the heir-at-law, except upon the construction of the gift (Awse v. Melhuish (1780), 1 Bro. C. C. 519, 522), and the burden of proof is then shifted to the heir or persons entitled on the testator's intestacy (Midland Counties Rail. Co. v. Oswin (1844), 1 Coll. 74, per KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C., at p. 78).

Regarded as a rule of construction, this rule would be in favour of intestacy, whereas the true presumption is against intestacy; see p. 665, ante. In old cases, however, the rule was applied as a rule of construction, so far as the heir was concerned, and to this extent the authority of these cases is open to doubt; see, for example, Piggot v. Penrice (1717), Prec. Ch. 471, compared with Doe d. Gillard v. Gillard (1822), 5 B. & Ald. 785, in Hamilton Corporation v. Hodsdon (1847), 6 Moo. P. C. C. 76, 86.

that the testator may have misunderstood the legal effect of the various species of gifts, and may have used language the legal interpretation of which may not carry out the intentions he had in his mind (k).

Where, however, the meaning of the will is ambiguous, and the will appears according to one construction to offend against some rule of law and to be partially invalid, but is fairly capable of another construction which avoids the objection, the latter is presumed to be the intention of the testator (a). The court has an inclination to believe, if reasonably possible, that the testator did not intend to transgress the law (b).

What rules of law considered.

1280. For the purposes of ascertaining the intention, those rules which prevailed when the will was made, and with reference to which the will may be fairly presumed to have been framed, must be observed (c), except in cases where the testator by his will expressly or impliedly refers to the law as existing at his death (d).

An Act of Parliament passed subsequent to the date of a will does not usually affect the ascertainment of the testator's intentions (e), although it may affect the legal operation of those intentions (f).

Legal effect
of words.

1281. The fact that when the testator desires to produce a particular disposition he shows himself able to choose words clearly apt by law to produce that result gives rise to a presumption that where he uses other words of doubtful import he does not wish to produce that result (g). SUB-SECT. 3.—Presumption that the Will is Rational and not Capricious.

1282. A testator has a right to be capricious if he chooses (i); if, therefore, the words used by the testator are unambiguous in the context, the sense given to the words by the context cannot be departed from, nor is the court induced to put a meaning on them different from that which the court judicially determines to be their meaning on account of any difficulty or inconvenience in carrying out the intention (k), or because they lead to consequences which are generally considered capricious (l), unusual (m), unjust (n), harsh or unreasonable (o).

right to be

1283. Without some clear expression of intention on the part of a testator, however, the court does not attribute to him a capricious intention (p), or a whimsical or harsh result to his dispositions (q), where the words of his will can be read otherwise. Accordingly if the language used in a will admits of two constructions, according to one of which the property disposed of will go in a rational, convenient and ordinary course of succession; and according to another in an irrational and inconvenient course, such that the court is driven to the conclusion that the testator is acting capriciously, without any intelligible motive, and contrary to the ordinary mode in which men act in similar cases, the court leans towards the former as what was intended, although a meaning is thereby given to the words different from their ordinary meaning (a).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Presumption Favouring Relatives or Persons having a Claim on the Testator.

Presumptions in favour of children.

1284. There is no presumption in the case of a will, as there is in the case of a marriage settlement (b), that the children of the testator are intended to be provided for or to have equal benefits (c), and the only guide to the court in this respect is the testator's language (d).

Express but

1286. Similarly, also, where the words of the will are ambiguous, the court may sometimes be assisted by the presumptions that, in the absence of special circumstances, relatives of equal degree are of equal importance to a testator as recipients of his bounty (k), and that as a rule a testator does not pass over a near relative for the purpose of benefiting more remote relatives, or over any relative or other person having a claim on him (l), or with whom he was intimate (m), for the purpose of benefiting relatives having no claim or strangers (n). The latter presumption, however, gives no assistance to the court in a contest between persons related in equal degree to the testator (o), nor are any of these presumptions applicable unless their application will accord with the actual words of the will (p).

construction (a); and a similar favour is shown to next of kin or persons claiming under the Statutes of Distribution (b). This appears, however, only to be the case where it is desired to avoid holding the will void for uncertainty (c). The general rule is that the heir and next of kin take, not under any presumed intention of the testator, but for want of any clear indication of his intention that someone else is to take (d).

SUB-SECT. 5.—General and Particular Intention; the Cy-près Doctrine.

General and
intention.

1288. It is sometimes regarded as a binding rule of construction (e) that where the court finds upon the face of a will a clear, general or paramount intention (f) to which effect can be given, and a particular or subordinate intention to which, by reason of some rule of law, the court cannot wholly or partially give effect, or which is inconsistent with (g) or does not carry out all the intentions which the testator has or is presumed to have, then the particular intention must be rejected or modified, and the general intention of the testator carried into effect (h). The application of this rule is cannot be made to bend to a supposed predilection in favour of male offspring" (Fulford v. Hardy, [1909] A. C. 570, P. C., per Lord DUNEDIN, at p. 574).

(a) The heir, or head of a family in order of inheritance, has been held to take under limitations to the "nearest" or "nearest and most deserving" of that family (Thellusson v. Rendlesham (Lord) (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 429, 512; Power v. Quealy (1878), 2 L. R. Ir. 227, affirmed 4 L. R. Ir. 20, C. A.; and see Doe d. Winter v. Ferratt (1843), 9 Cl. & Fin. 606, H. L.; Chapman's Case (1874), Dyer, 333 b), unless the context of the will shows that the testator did not intend the order of inheritance (Thomason v. Moses (1842), 5 Beav. 77).

(e) The rule is said to be an extension, and in its origin merely descriptive of the operation of the rule in Shelley's Case (1581). 1 Co. Rep. 93 b (Doe d. Gallini v. Grillini (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 621, per DENMAN, C.J., at p. 640; Kavanagh v. Morland (1853), Kay, 16, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 25); see Jenkins v. Herries (1819), 4 Madd. 67, where the doctrine is discussed; and note (i), p. 673, post. The examples of the application of the rule in the text, infra, show, however, that the rule is of wider significance; it appears to be a corollary to the general principle enunciated on p. 651, ante.

(f) This phrase is used to express "the overriding intention . . . the intention that is to be collected from the whole instrument" (Law Union and Crown Insurance Co. v. Hill, [1902] A. C. 263, per Lord DAVEY, at p. 266; and see ibid., per Lord HALSBURY, L.C., at p. 265).

not agreed upon, however, and it has been said (i) in cases where the testator used technical words of limitation, and other words showing that the donees were intended to take in a different way from that which the law allows, that the rule is more correctly stated in the same terms as the general rule concerning the meaning of technical words (k).

1289. This rule, however, has given rise to the cy-près doctrine, under which the intention of the testator is effectuated as nearly as may be consistently with certain rules of law (l). Established applications of the rule.

Further, where there is a devise to several persons in succession in words sufficient to pass to each of them the fee simple or the whole interest of the testator, the court, in order to give effect to the general intention, construes the gift as of successive estates tail (m).

Fitzgerald* (1858), 6 H. L. Cas. 823, where Lord WENSLEYDALE, at p. 877, considered that, notwithstanding the use of the terms "general" and "particular" intent by Lord ELDON, L.C., in Jesson v. Wright, supra, at p. 51, the doctrine had been put an end to by Lord REDESDALE's opinion in Jesson v. Wright, supra, Hayes, Principles for Expounding Dispositions of Real Estate, 1st ed., pp. 44, 106, Jarman on Wills, 1st ed., Vol. II., pp. 280, 405, and by Doe d. Gallini v. Gallini, supra, and thought that the use of the terms had better be discontinued. In Van Grutten v. Foxwell, Foxwell v. Van Grutten, [1897] A. C. 658, Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 671, described the doctrine as "most unsatisfactory" etc.

(k) It is submitted that the rule in the text, supra, is not intended to interfere with the application of that general rule, but assists the court only in cases where the application of that general rule itself would lead to contradiction or absurdity (see the exception to the general rule as stated by Lord WENSLEYDALE in the cases cited in note (i), p. 656, ante, as, for instance, where in a gift there are two sets of technical words, such that their technical meanings cannot at the same time be given to them with consistency); and that the rule is in effect "where something has to be sacrificed, it is to be seen what is the least sacrifice to be made, and what will best effectuate the intention of the testator" (Ashton v. Adamson (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 198, per SUGDEN, L.C., at p. 208).

(l) As to this doctrine in relation to gifts to successive generations of unborn issue, see title PERPETUITIES, Vol. XXII., pp. 367 et seq.; as to the administration cy-près of funds given on charitable trusts, see title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., p. 190. The foundation of the latter is given by Lord ELDON, L.C., in Mills v. Farmer (1815), 19 Ves. 483, at p. 486, as that "although the mode in which a legacy is to take effect is in many cases with regard to an individual legatee considered as of the substance of the legacy, where a legacy is given so as to denote that charity is the legatee, the court does not hold that the mode is of the substance of the legacy; but will effectuate the gift to charity as the substance"; and see Lyons (Mayor) v. Advocate-General of Bengal (1875), 1 App. Cas. 91, 113, P. C. The principle thus cannot be applied to a charitable gift where there is no general charitable intention (Re University of London Medical Sciences Institute Fund, Fowler v. A.-G., [1909] 2 Ch. 1, C. A.; and title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., p. 198).

Particularly this is the case where it can be seen plainly that the expressions in question were inserted in the will by mistake (Sims v. Doughty (1799), 5 Ves. 243, per ARDEN, M.R., at p. 247). Where either or any of two or more alterations may be satisfactory, the court has to inquire which in the circumstances is most probably the intention (*Mason v. necessary (o), or merely on a conjectural hypothesis of the testator's intention, however reasonable, in opposition to the plain and obvious sense of the instrument (p).

A common case where the court changes or supplies words is where two clauses in a will run parallel to each other (as in the case of clauses settling the separate shares of the donees) except for a difference which may have been caused by the omission of some words or other mistake in copying (q). Even in such a case, however, the court refuses to make any alteration where the clauses read as they stand are clear and unambiguous, and the suggestion of mistake rests only on conjecture (r).

There are many cases where "and" has been changed by the court into "or" (s), and vice versa (t).

1292. If in the same will (a) there are two inconsistent and irreconcilable gifts, the rule is that if the court can find nothing else to assist in determining the question (b) the latter clause is to prevail, as being the last expression of the testator's wish (c).

This rule, however, is only used as a last resort, when all attempts to reconcile the various provisions of the will have failed (d); and it is subject, for example, to the application of the rule that a prior gift should not be disturbed further than is necessary for the purpose of giving effect to the later disposition (e). Thus, if there are two absolute gifts, one of all the testator's property or all his property of a certain description, and the other of portions of that property, the more general gift is confined to the residue of that property (f); and if there is a clear, unambiguous gift, and a subsequent clause, in terms applying to this gift, or to this and other gifts, and as so applied inconsistent with the intention taken as a whole, the subsequent clause is neglected, or applied only to other gifts with which it is not inconsistent (g).

SECT. 1.

Canons Relating to the Scope of the Will.

Two residuary gifts in same will.

Reconciling gifts of the same subject-matter.

When a gift void for uncertainty.

Examples.

If there are two gifts in the same instrument, each sufficient to include the residuary estate, in cases where lapsed shares of the first gift would leave something for the second gift to operate upon, the first of the two gifts is preferred (h).

In certain cases, where the inconsistency lies in a gift to one person and a subsequent gift in the same instrument of the same thing to another person, it has been held, in order to reconcile the gifts, that both the donees take the gift, either together as joint tenants or tenants in common (i), or in succession (k), according to the nature of the gift.

SUB-SECT. 7.—Uncertainty.

1293. The absurd or irrational nature of a disposition clearly expressed, and the difficulties and doubts in interpreting a disposition ambiguously expressed, are not enough to render the disposition void for uncertainty; it must in general be incapable of any clear, definite meaning (l).

1294. The following are kinds of gifts which are void for uncertainty:—

(1) Gifts which are wanting in particularity of expression, as to the subject (m) or object (n) of the gift, where no person is nominated

269 ("living" applied only to some of donees); Bickford v. Chalker (1854), 2 Drew. 327 (inconsistent directions as to vesting); Re Bellamy's Trust (1862), 1 New Rep. 191 ("if living" applied to one only of several).

The context may show, however, that the second residuary gift is to include all lapsed legacies (Re Jessop (1859), 11 L. Ch. R. 424, explained in Re Isaac, Harrison v. Isaac, supra; Davis v. Bennet, supra). But where one gift is in the will and the other in a codicil, the court may conclude that there is a revocation of the gift in the will (Hardwicke (Earl) v. Douglas (1840), 7 Cl. & Fin. 795, H. L.).

by the testator or other means provided for giving particularity (o), or such means fail (p), and no canon of construction assists the court (a);

(2) Gifts which depend upon an infinite number of persons or things (b);

(3) Gifts which may have two or more alternative meanings, where there is nothing in the context or the admissible evidence (c), or any canon of construction (d), to assist the court in resolving the ambiguity (e);

(4) Gifts which are to be applied in perpetuity for purposes which cannot be construed as necessarily charitable (f), and include, without the possibility of severance, purposes for which a perpetual gift is not allowed (g).

1295. The court, however, adopts the benevolent rule that if there is ever so little reason in favour of one construction of an ambiguous devise more than another, this is at least nearer the intention of the testator than that the whole disposition should be void and the heir or next of kin let in (h); and that there is in general no objection where, from the context or the material circumstances of the case, the alleged uncertain matters can be ascertained to the satisfaction of the court (i). Thus, indefinite words added to a gift do not render it uncertain if the gift is substantially ascertained from the nature of the case (k); and no objection can arise where,

Canons
Relating to the Scope of the Will.

Gifts stated in alternative.

Gift to one of a set of persons.

though the amount of the gift is indefinite, it is stated to be for a particular purpose and the court can by inquiry ascertain what is the sum sufficient or necessary to fulfil that purpose (l). Further, a testator may validly appoint persons who may select the objects of his bounty (m), even though an infinite number of objects is open to such selection (n), except in cases where objects are comprised for which a perpetual gift is not allowed by law (o).

Where the amount of the gift (p) is stated in the alternative, the gift may be construed, according to the presumption in favour of the donee (q), as of the larger amount (r); and a direction to apply a sum not exceeding a named amount for a particular purpose may be similarly construed as a gift of the named amount, after any discretion applying to the gift is spent (s).

1296. Where the donee is defined as one of a named set of persons, satisfying some description (as in the case of a gift to one of the sons of A.), and there are in existence several persons in the set, the gift is void for uncertainty (t); but where at the date of the will there are no persons in existence who are members of the set, or satisfy the description, then the gift may admit of being construed to mean the person who first becomes a member of the set or satisfies the description (u).

SUB-SECT. 1.—Time to which a Will Refers.

Time

1297. It is a matter of construction of the whole will whether a particular clause is intended to speak from the death of the testator, or the date of the execution of the will (a), or other time (b).

(b) See Re Bayliss's Trust (1849), 17 Sim. 178 ("such as are married," meaning "shall be married at the date when the legacies are payable").

(c) Verbs used with the auxiliary "shall," however, as, for instance, in the phrase "persons who shall die in my lifetime," may not be used in their strictly grammatical sense, and may refer to events which, even if happening before the date of the will, are past at the testator's death, or the time he contemplates, in a case where it is not a question of the real and personal estate comprised in the will (d), prima facie those words should be read as speaking from the date of his making the will and not from the date of his death (e); but if the context shows that the testator could not mean the time of making the will as the time contemplated by him, then he must prima facie mean the time of his death (f).

SECT. 2.
Context and Meaning
of Words.

1298. With regard to the time at which persons and things described by the will are to be ascertained according to their descriptions, the presumptions are that descriptions of the real and personal estate comprised in the will refer to the death of the testator (g), and that descriptions of donees taking as individuals refer to the date of the will (h).

Descriptions.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Use of Same Words in Different Passages.

1299. The force of the context may give different meanings to the same word when used in different parts of a will, and the court does not, merely because a word bears a special meaning in one clause, necessarily give to it the same meaning in another clause of the will, in itself clear, and not connected with the first clause (i). The presumption (k), however, is that a word used in one part of a will with some clear and definite meaning is intended to mean the same thing in another part of the will, where its meaning is not clear (l).

Presumption
as to repeated words.

some other future time contemplated by the will. Thus, the above phrase may mean "persons who shall have died" etc. (Loring v. Thomas (1861), 1 Drew. & Sm. 497, 516; Re Lambert, Corns v. Harrison, [1908] 2 Ch. 117, 120; Barraclough v. Cooper (1905), [1908] 2 Ch. 121, n., 126, II. L.; and see Christopherson v. Naylor (1816), 1 Mer. 320; and the similar cases on settlements (Hewet v. Ireland (1718), 1 P. Wms. 426; Manning v. Chambers (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 282; Barnes v. Jennings (1866), L. Accordingly an event which happens before the date of the will is then not within the clause in question; and a phrase such as "persons who shall die in my lifetime" does not include persons dying before the date of the will (Coulthurst v. Carter (1852), 15 Beav. 421, 430; Gorringe v. Mahlstedt, [1907] A. C. 225; Re Cope, Cross v. Cross, [1908] 2 Ch. 1); contrast note (c), p. 680, ante.

Bradley* (1789), 3 Term Rep. 143, 146; Daintry v. Daintry (1795), 6 Term Rep. 307; and Roe d. Sheers v. Jeffery (1798), 7 Term Rep. 589, 595, have been disapproved.

(o) See title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X. p. 469. For examples where the general words were held to retain their ordinary signification, see Kendall v. Kendall (1828), 4 Russ. 360; Arnold v. Arnold (1834), 2 My. & K. 365 ("my wines and property in England"); Ellis v. Selby (1835), 7 Sim. 352, 364; Fisher v. Hepburn (1851), 14 Beav. 626; Everall v. Browne (1853), 1 Sm. & G. 368 ("other property, goods and articles"). For examples of the application of the ejusdem generis rule to wills, see Trafford v. Berrige (1729), 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 201, pl. 14 ("other things"); Timewell v. Perkins (1740), 2 Atk. 102 ("etc., or in any other thing"); Stuart v. Butz (Marquis) (1813), 1 Dow. 73, H. L. ("things"); Wrench v. Jutting (1841), 3 Beav. 521 ("other goods"); Lamphier v. Despard (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 59 ("other chattel property"); Re Kendall's Trust (1851), 14 Beav. 608 ("everything I die possessed of, namely . . ."); Barnaby v. Tassell (1870), L. R. 11 Eq. 363, 369 ("etc."); Re Lonsborough (Lord), Bridgman v. Fitzgerald (Lord) (1880), 43 L. T. 408 ("objects of vertu or taste"). As to the construction of "etc." see, further, Steignes v. Steignes (1730), Mos. 296; Twining v. Powell (1845), 2 Coll. 262; Hertford (Marquis) v. Lowther (Lord) (1843), 7 Beav. 1; Re Andrew's Estate, Creasey v. Graves (1902), 50 W. R. 471 (real estate included). The ejusdem generis rule has been applied to descriptions of any persons and things, as well as to descriptions of donees and of property; see, for example, in investment clauses, Edwards v. Thompson (1868), 38 L. J. (CH.) 65 ("any railway" restricted to English); Re Castlghow, Lamonby v. Carter, [1903] 1 Ch. 352 ("public company" restricted to English), with which compare Re Stanley, Tennant v. Stanley, [1906] 1 Ch. 131, where the context made no restriction; see, further, the examples of the meaning of "effects," p. 700, post. Although it is more difficult to infer that general words are cut down if there is an enumeration of only one species, or a slender enumeration of species of particulars (Swinfen v. Swinfen (No. 4) (1860), 29 Beav. 207; Campbell v. McGrain (1875), 9 I. R. Eq. 397, per SULLIVAN, M.R., at p. 400), yet there is no rule that general words cannot be so cut down (Northey v. Paxton (1888), 60 L. T. 30; Re O'Brien, O'Brien v. O'Brien, [1906] 1 L. R. 649, 653, C. A.). overridden by the operation of the presumption against intestacy (p). Where, therefore, the general words occur in a clause of the nature of a residuary gift, the ordinary larger meaning of the words is adhered to (q); but this consideration does not assist where the general words would in their larger meaning carry a residuary estate which is dealt with by another clause of the will (r).

Context and Meaning
of Words.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Effect of Recitals or Other Statements.

1301. If there are in the will no words amounting to a gift, or other indication of an intention to confer bounty, but merely words of erroneous recital or recognition of indebtedness or affection, the court considers that no intention of making a gift is disclosed by the will (s), and a recital showing that the testator considered that some person possessed a title to property independently of his own prima facie gives rise to the inference that the testator did not intend to make an actual disposition in favour of that person (t). On the other hand, a recital showing that the testator is under the impression that he has made a certain disposition is evidence of an intention inadvertently not expressed to make that gift (a). Accordingly in such a case the court may give effect to such intention if the other provisions of the will allow that course (b); and the inference from such a recital may be sufficient to overcome and correct the terms of an express gift to the person in question (c), provided (d) that the court is satisfied that there has been a mistake in carrying out the testator's intention; otherwise the recital is treated as erroneous and is neglected (e).

1302. The rule that a recital unless it is obviously erroneous may be referred to by way of explanation of a gift in itself doubtful or ambiguous applies to wills (f).

SECT. 3.—Inaccuracy of Descriptions in General.

1303. If all the terms of description fit some particular subject, then, except by the context (g), they cannot be enlarged so as to include anything which part of those terms does not accurately fit (h), nor can they be restricted so as not to include some part of the subject accurately described (i).

On the other hand, if the words of description when examined do not fit with accuracy, and if there must be some modification of them (k) in order to place a sensible construction on the will, then the whole must be looked at fairly in order to see what are the leading words of description and what is the subordinate matter, and generally how the subject intended by the testator can be identified (l), and for this purpose evidence of extrinsic facts may be regarded (m). In such cases the words are presumed to be a misgift, the court ought to see very clearly that there is nothing in the will to which the recital can refer before it is turned into a distinct bequest: otherwise an inaccurate testator may be held to make a second bequest, when he has only made an incorrect reference to the first."

description of a subject existing and with regard to which the will may validly operate (n). Where, however, the context shows that the testator was not merely misdescribing an actually existing subject, but was under an erroneous impression that the subject actually did exist as described, or that he could dispose of it, the gift may fail (o).

of Descriptions
in General.

1304. A false description does not affect a gift if it is clear what is the subject described (a). Thus, where the description of either property or donee or other person or thing mentioned in the will (b) is wholly false, so that no known existing person or thing satisfies the description, but the context of the will and the circumstances of the case (c) show unambiguously who or what the testator meant, the description is rejected and the intention of the testator effectuated (d).

Description
wholly wrong, but subject certain.

(n) The presumption is that a designation in general words of the property intended to be affected by a will refers primò facie to that property only upon which the will is capable of operating (Maxwell v. Maxwell (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 705, 715, approving Wentworth v. Cox (1822), Madd. & G. 363, 364; Baring v. Ashburton (1886), 54 L. T. 463), and that the testator intended to dispose only of his own property; see title EQUIT, Vol. XIII., p. 121.

(o) As, for instance, where the context shows that the testator erroneously believed that he had such property as described, or where he had only the intention of acquiring it (Evans v. Tripp (1821), Madd. & G. 91; Waters v. Wood (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 717; Miller v. Woodside (1872), 6 L. R. Eq. 546), or where the testator described persons whom he merely imagined were in existence, and who did not exist (Delmare v. Kowello (1792), 1 Ves. 412; Daubeny v. Coghlan (1842), 12 Sim. 507).

(a) Falsa demonstratio non nocet cum de corpore constat (Travers v. Blundell (1877), 6 Ch. D. 436, 442, 444, C. A.). The last four words of this maxim are very important (Re Brockett, Dawes v. Miller, [1908] 1 Ch. 186, per JOYCE, J., at p. 194); the false description must be superadded to that which was clear before (Thomas d. Evans v. Thomas (1796), 6 Term Rep. 671, per Lord KENYON, C.J., at p. 676); it does not only apply, however, to cases where there is some incorrect description at the end of the sentence (Cowen v. Truefitt, Ltd., [1899] 2 Ch. 309, 311, C. A.); and see the examples in the notes, infra. As to this rule in case of a deed, see title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., pp. 465, 466. Præsentia corporis tollit errorem nominis* (Bacon, Maxims, r. 24).

(b) Re Rayer, Rayer v. Rayer, [1903] 1 Ch. 685 (direction to pay duty which had been abolished as regards particular legacies given).

(c) As to the reception of evidence in such cases, see p. 639, ante.

(d) For examples of the application of the rule to descriptions of donees, see Masters v. Masters (1718), 1 P. Wms. 421, 425; Beaumont v. Fell (1723), 2 P. Wms. 141; A.-G. v. Rye Corporation (1817), 7 Taunt. 546 (misdescription of corporation); Queen's College, Oxford v. Sutton (1842), 12 Sim. 521; Hopkinson v. Ellis (1842), 5 Beav. 34 ("rector" instead of "vicar"); Bristow v. Bristow (1842), 5 Beav. 289, 291; Les v. Pain (1845), 4 Hare, 201, 263 ("Miss S. J." meant "Mrs. F. A. W."); Douglas v. Fellows (1853), Kay, 114; Ellis v. Bartrum (No. 2) (1857), 25 Beav. 109; Re Waller, White v. Scoles (1889), 80 L. T. 701. A gift to the children of A. may thus take effect in favour of the children of B. where the context and circumstances show them to have been intended (Bradwin v. Harper (1759), Amb. 374; Bristow v. Bristow, supra; Camoy's (Lord) v. Blundell (1848), 1 H. L. Cas. 778). As to illegitimate relatives taking under a gift, see p. 735, post; and for cases of misdescriptions of charities, see title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., p. 159. For examples of the application of the rule to descriptions of property or things, see lie Cranfield, Mosse v. Cranfield, [1895] 1 L. R. 80 ("money on deposit receipt" in A.

1305. If there is in any part of a description a sufficient description of the subject-matter, with convenient certainty of what was intended, any erroneous addition or error in part of the description does not vitiate the gift (c). The characteristic of cases within this rule is that the description so far as it is false applies to no subject at all, and so far as it is true applies to one only (f).

("sums owing" to donee); Flood v. Flood, [1902] 1 I. R. 538 (shares in railway company wrongly named); Re Glassington, Glassington v. Pollett, [1906] 2 Ch. 305 (real estate, as description of proceeds of sale).

(e) Llewellyn v. Jersey (Earl) (1843), 11 M. & W. 183, per PARKE, B., at p. 189 (as to a deed); Morrell v. Fisher (1849), 4 Exch. 591, per ALDERSON, B., at p. 604; Goodright d. Lamb v. Pears (1809), 11 East, 58; Anderson v. Berkley, [1902] 1 Ch. 936, 940. As to the application of the rule to the parcels of a deed, see title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., pp. 465, 466.

(f) Morrell v. Fisher, supra; Cowen v. Truefitt, Ltd., [1899] 2 Ch. 309, 312, C. A. Examples of the application of the rule to descriptions of donees will be found in Ryall v. Hannam (1847), 10 Beav. 536 (to "Elizabeth A., a natural daughter of" a named person, where the name and sex were incorrect), followed in Re Reckitt's Trusts (1853), 11 Hare, 299; Ford v. Bailey (1853), 17 Beav. 303; Stringer v. Gardiner (1859), 4 De G. & J. 468, C. A. ("my niece E. S."; a great-grandniece, E. J. S., took); Doe d. Gains v. Rouse (1848), 5 C. B. 422 ("my wife C."); Re Ingle's Trusts (1871), L. R. 11 Eq. 578 ("my late nephew M."; he was living); Thomson v. Eastwood (1877), 2 App. Cas. 215, 229; Re Bute (Marquess). Bute (Marquess) v. Ryder (1884), 27 Ch. D. 196, 219; Anderson v. Berkley, [1902] 1 Ch. 936 ("to A.'s wife L.," where "wife" was rejected); Re Hooper, Hooper v. Warner (1903), 88 L. T. 160 ("to Percy H. son of C. H.," where christian name was rejected). Cases of inaccuracy in giving the number of a class of donees depend on construction as to whether the whole or part of the class are to take; see p. 742, post. For examples as to descriptions of property, see Day v. Trig (1715), 1 P. Wms. 286; Door v. Geary (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 255 (stock, name wrong, amount right); Mackinley v. Sison (1837), 8 Sim. 561; Power v. Lenahan (1838), 2 Jo. Ex. Ir. 728; Quennell v. Turner (1851), 13 Beav. 240 (public funds "in my name," meaning in the name of trustees); Drake v. Martin (1856), 23 Beav. 89; Ellis v. Ellis (No. 2) (1858), 25 Beav. 482; Rowlatt v. Easton (1863), 11 W. R. 767; Burbey v. Burbey (1867), 15 L. T. 501; Coltman v. Gregory (1870), 40 L. J. (CH) 352 (shares described as in joint names, in fact in testator's name only). As to descriptions of debts owing to the testator, see Williams v. Williams (1786), 2 Bro. C. C. 87; Maybery v. Brooking (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 673, C. A.; Wilson v. Morley (1877), 5 Ch. D. 776; Re Hodgson, Darley v. Hodgson, [1899] 1 Ch. 666. References to particular parishes, streets, or other localities were rejected in Owens v. Bean (1678), Cas. temp. Finch, 395 (parish right, county wrong); Hastad v. Searle (1699), 1 Ld. Raym. 728; Brown v. Longley (1732), 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 416, pl. 14; Doe d. Beach v. Jersey (Earl) (1818), 1 R. & Ald. 550; (1825) 3 B. & C. 870; Newton v. Lucas (1836), 1 My. & Cr. 391; Gauntlett v. Carter (1853), 17 Beav. 586; Armstrong v. Buckland (1854), 18 Beav. 204; Tann v. Tann (1863), 2 New Rep. 412; Harman v. Gurner (1866), 35 Beav. 478, where, however, there was evidence of habitual misdescription by the testator; Homer v. Homer (1878), 8 Ch. D. 758, C. A.; Re Mayell, Foley v. Ward, [1913] 2 Ch. 488. References to occupation were rejected in Blague v. Gold (1638), Cro. Car. 447, 473; Goodtitle d. Paul v. Paul (1760), 2 Burr. 1089; Marshall v. Hopkins (1812), 15 East, 309, where the words were transposed; Goodtitle d. Radford v. Southern (1813), 1 M. & S. 299; Nightingall v. Smith (1846), 1 Exch. 879; Doe d. Campion v. Carpenter (1850), 15 Jur. 719; White v. Birch (1867), 36 L. J. (CH) 174, dissenting from Doe d. Parkin v. Parkin (1814), 5 Taunt. 321;

1306. If, however, it is doubtful upon the words of the will whether they import a false reference or demonstration, or whether they are words of restraint that limit the generality of former words, the court never presumes error or falsehood, and the latter construction is preferred (g). If, therefore, there exists some subject as to which all the demonstrations are true, and some as to which part are true and part false, the words are considered to be words of true restriction, so that they refer to that subject only as to which all the demonstrations are true (h).

SECT. 3.
Inaccuracy of Descriptions in General.

Description wholly true as to one subject, partly true as to another.

Hardwick v. Hardwick (1873), L. R. 10 Eq. 168. References to a particular tenure, such as freehold, leasehold etc., were rejected in Denn v. Wilkins v. Kemeys (1808), 9 East, 366; Doe d. Dunning v. Cranston (Lord) (1840), 7 M. & W. 1; Nelson v. Hopkins (1852), 21 L. J. (CH.) 410; Re Bright-Smith, Bright-Smith v. Bright-Smith (1886), 31 Ch. D. 314; Re Steel, Wappett v. Robinson, [1903] 1 Ch. 136, where, however, there was evidence of local usage; and compare Saxton v. Saxton (1879), 13 Ch. D. 359. References to mode of acquisition were rejected in Hill v. St. John (1775), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 375; Welby v. Welby (1813), 2 Ves. & B. 187, 191; Harrison v. Hyde (1859), 4 H. & N. 805; Cooch v. Walden (1877), 46 L. J. (CH.) 639; *Sealy v. When this rule is applied, all the words must be wholly true for the restricted subject identified. Thus, if there are leading words of description identifying a subject as a whole, and not merely any part of that subject, and words are added descriptive of situation, occupation, or the like, which are true for only part of that subject, and there is no other indication of intention to give part only, then the whole is held to pass (Paul v. Paul (1760), 1 Wm. Bl. 255, 256; Hardwick v. Hardwick, supra, at pp. 176, 177); compare the cases cited on p. 686, ante, under the rule as to falsa demonstratio, which is the rule then applied, and not the rule in the text, supra.

1307. If the description is not strictly applicable to any person or thing, but is applicable partly to one person or thing and partly to another, the court may inquire into the material circumstances of the case for the purpose of deciding whether the testator intended to make the gift applicable to the one or the other (i).

1308. Where some subject-matter is given under a denomination applicable to the whole, and then words are added, on the principle of enumeration, which do not completely enumerate and exhaust all the particulars which are included under the antecedent denomination, the question is which is the predominant description (k). If the subsequent description is meant to substitute a definite and precise statement for an antecedent generality, the subsequent description must be read as explanatory and if necessary as restrictive of the prior general description (l), otherwise the general description is given its full effect (a).

1309. A donee has been often sufficiently designated by a nickname or erroneous name proved to have been used by the testator, or by a name gained by reputation and known to the testator (b); and property may be sufficiently described by the description the testator was wont to use (c).

him and all others, the latter is neglected (d). There is no rule, however, that, without any evidence to prove an error of description, the mere name should prevail; in order that the rule may be applicable it is necessary first to show that there is an error in description (e). In similar cases, where a description is correct and sufficient, an incorrect name may be neglected (f). In cases where either the name alone or the description alone is sufficient to identify a subject, and they do not identify the same subject, then, according to the circumstances of the case, the description and not the name (g), or the name and not the description (h), may prevail. The name in fact is only a description (i), and the question is to determine which portion of the whole description is to prevail (k). A test often adopted by the court in such a case is to inquire whether the testator was in the circumstances more liable to err when he described the donee by name or when he attempted to point him out by some further adjunct; and the court adopts that description which in each instance appears to be least open to error (l).

rules as to the circumstances taken into account (m); but where a person or body who once satisfied the description no longer existed at the date of the will, another person or body existing at the date of the will, and satisfying the description inaccurately but sufficiently may, nevertheless, be entitled under the gift (n).

An accurate description of a donee by name is not as a rule affected in the case of a person by a change of name before the testator's death (o); or in the case of a society, corporation, or body by a change of name or reorganisation, if the donee substantially exists in the same nature as at the date of the will (p). By the terms of the will, however, the qualification of possessing a specific name (q) at the death of the testator (r), or at the time of payment or vesting (s), or at some other time (t), may be a condition of the gift taking effect at all.

A gift which accurately describes property of a generic nature (u) belonging to the testator at the date of the will does not fail when the description is sufficiently apt to indicate particular property belonging to the testator at his death, though as a description of such property it is inaccurate; and the latter property accordingly passes under the gift (a), the inaccuracy being then of no importance (b). Where, out of several properties alleged to satisfy the description at the death, one only accurately satisfies it (c), that property only passes under the gift (d). Where no property at all i sufficiently described by the words of the will at the death of the testator the gift fails (e), except that in cases where the testator had neither at the date of the will nor at his death property accurately described by the words of the will, the court may from the circumstances be able to infer what was meant to be described, and the gift does not necessarily fail (f); in the case of bequests of personal estate, the gift may take effect as a general legacy (g).

In case of a description of a specific property existing at the date of the will, the whole of that property may pass under the gift, notwithstanding that the description at the date of the death applies accurately to part only of that property (h).

(i) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 24. This provision has no application to descriptions of donees; see note (k), p. 714, post. With regard to personal estate there was a rule before the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), that a will spoke from death (Re Chapman, Perkins v. Chapman, [1904] 1 Ch. 431, 436, C. A.). With regard to real estate, in wills not subject to the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), the descriptions of property spoke from the date of the will, unless the contrary intention was shown; see note (q), p. 517, ante.

(k) The rule now applies to wills of married women: see p. 535, ante; and title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., p. 380.

(l) Including property subject to a power exercised by the will (see title POWERS, Vol. XXIII., p. 43); even where the will purports to exercise a power over property which at the testator's death has become his absolute property (Re James, Hole v. Bethune, [1910] 1 Ch. 157). The meaning of this phrase was discussed in Langdale (Lady) v. Briggs (1856), 8 De G. M. & G. 391, C. A., per TURNER, L.J., at p. 431 ("so far as the will comprises dispositions of real and personal estate"); Re Wells' Trusts, Hardisty v. Wells (1889), 42 Ch. D. 646, 657 ("a very different thing from saying that the will is for all purposes to speak"); Re Gillins, Inglis v. Gillins, [1909] 1 Ch. 345, per WARRINGTON, J., at p. 349. The Act "does not say that we are to construe whatever a man says in his will as if it were made on the day of his death. . . . When there is a puzzle as to which clause of the will carries a particular property, the statute does not say which is to outweigh the other, but only that the property is to be comprised in the will. The question remains which clause carries the property, the residuary or the specific devise" (Re Portal and Lamb (1885), 30 Ch. D. 50, C. A., per LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 55). A release of debts to a specified person is within the statutory provision (Everett v. Everett (1877), 7 Ch. D. 428, C. A.; and see Re Mitchell, Freelove v. Mitchell, [1913] 1 Ch. 201 (claim made by testator's executors to indemnity against claims under his guarantee made after his death not included)). The question whether this rule applies to speak and take effect as if it had been executed immediately before the death of the testator (m), and as if the condition of things to which it refers in this respect is that existing immediately before the death of the testator (a), unless a contrary intention appears by the will.

In a case, therefore, where the thing given is generic (b), and may increase, diminish, or otherwise change during the testator's life, so that the description may from time to time apply to different amounts of property of like nature or to different objects, then the effect of the presumption, if applicable, is that the property answering the description at the death of the testator passes under the gift (c).

intention.

No contrary intention is shown by the mere use of a possessive adjective (d) in the case of such a generic gift (c); nor by a description of the property as being that of which the testator is

The Act does not merely apply, however, to a residuary gift; it applies to specific gifts (Langdale (Lady) v. Briggs (1856), 8 De G. M. & G. 391, 436, 437, C. A.; Re Ord, Dickinson v. Dickinson (1879), 12 Ch. D. 22, 25, C. A.). Saxton* (1879), 13 Ch. D. 359 ("my term and interest in the leasehold dwelling-house" specified: purchase of reversion to leasehold); Re Gillins, Inglis v. Gillins, [1909] 1 Ch. 345 ("twenty-five shares" passed only shares as subdivided after the date of the will), explained, however, as a case of a general legacy in Re Clifford, Mallam v. McFie, [1912] 1 Ch. 29, 31; and compare Millard v. Bailey (1866), L. R. 1 Eq. 378, as explained in Re Gibson, Mathews v. Foulsham (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 669; Re M'Affee, Mack v. Quirey, [1909] 1 I. R. 124). A gift of the testator's lands in a certain locality thus prima facie passes all the lands he has in that locality at the time of his death (Doe d. York v. Walker (1844), 12 M. & W. 591 ("all the lands of which I am seised"); Re Ord, Dickinson v. Dickinson, supra ("my leasehold houses situate at C."); *Re Bridger, Brompton Hospital for Consumption v. seised or possessed (f). A description of the property as that which the testator "now" owns or occupies, according to the circumstances (g), may, but, it appears, prima facie does not (h), show such a contrary intention as to exclude after-acquired property of the specified nature.

This statutory rule, however, does not affect a description of some specific thing existing at the date of the will (i).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Accessories Follow the Principal Gift.

1312. It is a rule applicable to a gift by will (k) as well as to a grant by deed (l) that, along with the subject-matter of any gift, all rights and benefits, which are necessary and essential (m) elements in the reasonable enjoyment of that subject-matter in the state in which it is given (n), are prima facie impliedly conferred (o). implication does not necessarily arise from construction, but from the circumstance of necessary dependence shown by the facts of the case; and when all surrounding circumstances which may legitimately be inquired into are known the result may be different or the extent of the implied gift controlled (p).

SUB-SECT. 3.—General Descriptions of Property.

All testator's

1313. A description of property of any kind in a general manner, such as "lands," "personal estate," and the like, not identifying any particular item of such property, primâ facie (g) includes all interests, legal or equitable (r), vested or contingent (s), in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy (t), in property of that kind (a), capable of being so disposed of (b) by the will of the testator; and

(p) Phillips v. Low, [1892] 1 Ch. 47, 50, 51; Birmingham, Dudley, and District Banking Co. v. Ross (1888), 38 Ch. D. 295, 308, 311, 315.

(g) For an example of a contrary intention shown by the will taken as a whole, see Teatt v. Strong (1760), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 219. Such a contrary intention must amount to an intention to exclude such interests, as distinct from an absence of the intention to include them (Doe d. Cholmondeley (Lord and Lady) v. Weatherby (1809), 11 East, 322, 333; Doe d. Pell v. Jeyes (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 593, 600; Doe d. Howell v. Thomas (1840), 1 Man. & G. 335, 344).

(r) Thus, a general devise of the testator's lands, or lands in a particular locality, includes lands contracted to be purchased and not actually conveyed to him (Atcherley v. Vernon (1725), 10 Mod. Rep. 578; Greenhill v. Greenhill (1711), 2 Vern. 679; Holmes v. Barker (1816), 2 Madd. 462); for other general descriptions of property, see Collison v. Girling (1838), 4 My. & Cr. 63, 75 ("my stock"); Re Stevens, Sterens v. Reilly, [1888] W. N. 110 ("my estate share and interest" in a business). A description of stock of or to which the testator may "be possessed or entitled" at his death does not ordinarily include stock purchased on his instructions but after his death (Thomas v. Thomas (1859), 27 Beav. 537).

Howell v. Thomas, supra*; Tennent v. Tennent (1844), 1 Jo. & Lat. 379, 389 (fact that property is limited to the same uses as the land under the uses of which the testator's interest arises is not sufficient to exclude that interest); Alliston v. Chapple (1860), 6 Jur. (N. S.) 288 (remainder in specific real estate given by the same will); Church v. Mundy (1808), 15 Ves. 396. Similarly, an unsettled reversion in settled lands passes under a gift of "lands not settled" (Glover v. Spendlove (1793), 4 Bro. C. C. 337; Cooke v. Gerrard (1667), 1 Lev. 212; Chester v. Chester (1727), 3 P. Wms. 56; A.-G. v. Vigor (1803), 8 Ves. 256; Jones v. Skinner (1835), 5 L. J. (CH.) 87; Incorporated Society v. Richards (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 258); and "property not included in" a certain settlement may include an absolute interest under an ultimate trust in that settlement (O'Reilly v. Smyth (1851), 1 I. Ch. R. 349; Re Green, Walsh v. Green (1893), 31 L. R. 1r. 338); but expressions of this kind are equivocal, capable of meaning either the lands comprised in the settlement, or so much of the whole interest in the lands as is not subject to the settlement (Ford v. Ford (1848), 6 Hare, 486, 494; Incorporated Society v. Richards, supra, at pp. 280, 281; Goodtitle d. Daniel v. Miles (1805), 6 East, 494).

(a) As to mortgages and leasehold interests with regard to a gift of "lands," see, further, p. 704, post. As to growing crops, see note (t), p. 521, ante.

general descriptions of property are prima facie construed in their general sense (c), but are capable of being controlled by the context, for example, under the ejusdem generis rule (d).

A description of property, which in its usual sense is apt to include kinds of property of both real and personal nature, is not made applicable to real estate only or to personal estate only by reason that the limitations are more applicable to that particular kind of property, or are even inapplicable to any but that particular kind of property (e), although that is an indication to be considered in connexion with the whole context (f).

A general description of chattels, which is made the subject of a gift for life and other interests in succession, is not construed as including chattels consumed in the use of them, unless the intention is clearly shown in the context (g).

Blackburn* (1833), 1 My. & K. 571); or other gifts where the will shows that the testator had other kinds of property present to his mind, and the trusts can be applied to such portion of the blended property as is capable of being so taken (Saumarez v. Saumarez (1839), 4 My. & Cr. 331, explained in Stokes v. Salomons (1851), 9 Hare, 75, 83). Gifts to trustees took effect subject to resulting trusts as to parts of the property in Dunnage v. White (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 583, and Longley v. Longley (1871), L. R. 13 Eq. 133.

(f) As, for instance, in gifts to trustees, "their executors, administrators, and assigns" (Doe d. Spearing v. Buckner (1796), 6 Term Rep. 610, which case, it appears, would now be decided otherwise; Fullerton v. Martin, supra, at p. 894; Newland v. Marjoribanks (1813), 5 Taunt. 268; Doe d. Hurrell v. Hurrell (1821), 5 B. & Ald. 18; Coard v. Holderness (1855), 20 Beav. 147; Prescott v. Barker (1874), 9 Ch. App. 174; and see Pogson v. Thomas (1840), 6 Bing. (N. C.) 337, which case, however, it appears, would not now be followed; Stein v. Ritherdon (1868), 37 L. J. (CH.) 369, 372). Such indications, however, become of less weight where there is a direction for sale and distribution (O'Toole v. Browne, supra, discussing Sanderson v. Dobson (1847), 1 Exch. 141, and S. C. (1849), 7 C. B. 81; Streatfield v. Cooper, supra; Dobson v. Bowness (1868), L. R. 5 Eq. 404, 408).

(h) As to cases where a restriction to a locality only applied in the context to part of the gift, see Norris v. Norris (1846), 2 Coll. 719; Domville v. Taylor (1863), 32 Beav. 604. A gift of "the contents" of a residence ordinarily includes such fixtures as the testator might remove (Re Oppenheim, Oppenheim v. Oppenheim (1914), 58 Sol. Jo. 723).

testator (i), unless the restriction to that locality is to be rejected as falsa demonstratio (k). If, however, the property described is movable, the intention is inferred, unless the context is to the contrary (l), that the gift includes property which is usually in that situation and has been removed merely temporarily (m) or of necessity for its preservation (n), or, it seems, tortiously (o), but not in general property otherwise permanently removed (p). Further, since choses in action are not considered as localised (q), a general description of property in a certain locality primâ facie (r) does not include any choses in action due, payable, or recoverable there, or represented by documents, other than Bank of England notes (s), which are kept there (t), unless the locality is a place Craven* (1909), 100 L. T. 284, C. A. (gift of a house and its contents: bonds and securities were excluded)). A gift of a "box" or other receptacle does not ordinarily include securities which it contains (Re Hunter, Northey v. Northey (1908), 25 T. L. R. 19). T. 682. In Mannoz v. Greener, supra, it was held that the rule was not confined to cases of devises of "rents and profits," the rents in that case being described as "income." Where, however, a gift of property (as, for instance, "hereditaments") to trustees is sufficient to include an advowson with other property, a trust of the "rents and annual income" of that property, expressly for life, is not ordinarily sufficient to include the right of next presentation to that advowson (Martin v. Martin (1843), 12 Sim. 679), although a trust of the "rents and profits" would be sufficient to include that right (Sherard v. Harborough (Lord) (1753), Amb. 165, 167; Albemarle (Earl) v. Rogers (1794), 2 Ves. 477; Cook v. Cholmondeley (1854), 3 Drew. 1; Cust v. Middleton (1864), 34 L. J. (CH.) 185, C. A.).

This rule may, however, be excluded where the will shows that the donee is not to take the land or capital (g), as where the donee is to take an interest of the same nature as another donee who expressly takes a life interest only (h); and the rule does not apply where the gift of income is not unlimited (i), or where the gift is not of all the benefits arising from the property (k); but merely of a particular benefit (l) or a benefit to be enjoyed by the donee personally (m). But it makes no difference whether the income be given to the donee directly or through the intervention of trustees (n).

A charge upon such rents, dividends, and income indefinitely may be a charge on the property itself in similar cases (o).

a gift of the income to the donee indefinitely, requiring the act of marriage to determine the gift, the donee remaining unmarried takes an absolute interest in the fund (p).

If a testator, being entitled to land subject to a lease, devises the "rent" or "ground rent" of the land, without expressly disposing of his reversion, the devise primâ facie includes not only the rent payable during the lease, but the whole interest of the testator in the land (q).

Lands do not pass under the word "appurtenances," with reference to other land, in its strict technical sense; but they do pass if it appears that a larger sense was intended to be given to the word, as in the case of a gift of "lands appertaining" to other lands (r). articles which tend to the beneficial occupation and enjoyment of the house, ending with "all other effects," by the ejusdem generis rule (o) it may be restricted to other articles of that nature (a); and the expression is frequently used in a restricted sense, meaning goods and movables (b), a sense especially applicable where other parts of the personal estate are otherwise disposed of (c), or where there is a subsequent residuary gift of personal estate (d).

1320. "Estate," as a general description of property (e), is not a technical word (f), and primâ facie, when used in a suitable context, is a very wide term (g), and is sufficient to include the whole real (h) and personal (i) estate of the testator.

The words "the funds," standing alone and without a context, have been held to mean the funds established by various Acts of Parliament and forming part of the National Debt of the United Kingdom (k), and where in a will words of description refer to the funds, as in the case of funded property, money in the funds, and like expressions, the primâ facie reference is to such public funds (l); but the context and the circumstances may involve a different construction (m).

1321. The expression "goods" or "goods and chattels" as a description of property is primâ facie sufficient to include the whole personal estate (n).

"House or building."

"Investments."

"Land," and other general devises.

1322. Words which primâ facie describe only a house or other building may, in suitable contexts and circumstances, include land necessary for the convenient use and occupation of it (o). A gift of a house "and premises" is primâ facie sufficient to include such land (p) and the appurtenances of the house (q). Even other land commonly enjoyed with the house may be included in such descriptions (r). A gift of a house primâ facie includes chattels affixed to and used for the decoration or convenience of the house (s).

1323. The ordinary meaning of the word "investments," unaffected by any context, does not include money on deposit at a bank (t).

(b) In wills made before the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), a devise of "lands" primâ facie did not include leaseholds where there were freehold estates as to which the gift could be operative (Rose v. Burtlett (1633), Cro. Car. 292; Davis v. Gibbs (1729), 3 P. Wms. 26; Chapman v. Hart (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 271; Thompson v. Lawley (Lady) (1860), 2 Bos. & P. 303). Leaseholds, however, might pass under the gift either if there were no freeholds for the gift to operate upon, or if the will showed a contrary intention (Day v. Trig (1716), 1 P. Wms. 286; Knotsford v. Gardiner (1742), 2 Atk. 450; Louth v. Cavendish (1758), 1 Eden, 99; Addis v. Clement (1728), 2 P. Wms. 456, adversely criticised in *Thompson v. testator, or of the land of the testator in any place (c) or in the occupation of any person mentioned in the will, or otherwise described in a general manner, and any other general devise (d) which would describe a customary copyhold or leasehold estate if the testator had no freehold estate which could be described by it, is construed to include the customary copyhold and leasehold estates of the testator, or such of those estates or any of them as are within such description, as the case may be, as well as freehold estates, unless a contrary intention appears by the will (e).

A devise of "real estate" may be such a general devise as last-mentioned (f), but, it appears, is more readily given its technical meaning (g).

A gift of land in a named place does not in its technical sense (h)

Wms. 459, n., contra, was approved; Turner v. Husler (1780), 1 Bro. C. C. 78; Lane v. Stunkope (Earl) (1795), 6 Term Rep. 345; Hartley v. Hurle (1801), 5 Ves. 540; *Goodman v. Nor did copyholds not surrendered to the uses of the will pass under a gift of lands, except in similar cases (Watkins v. Lea (1802), 6 Ves. 633; Doc d. Belarise v. Lucan (Earl) (1808), 9 East, 448; Church v. Mundy (1806), 12 Ves. 426; (1808), 15 Ves. 396; Judd v. Pratt (1808), 15 Ves. 390; *Sampson v. The object of the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), is to shift the burden of proof and to throw it on the persons who deny that in a will "lands" are meant to include leasehold estates in land (Prescott v. Barker (1874), 9 Ch. App. 174, per Lord SELBORNE, L.C., at p. 186).

(d) As to this phrase, see Butler v. Butler (1884), 28 Ch. D. 66, per CHITTY, J., at p. 72 (corrected by the report in 52 L. T. 90, 93): "... "this second branch was intended to cover certain cases that might not be covered by the first branch, and ... I must find in the will, though it is a will where there is a general devise, some description which points to a particular thing, to a particular estate."

(e) See Wilson v. Eden, supra (no restriction by addition of "all other my real estate in the county of D."; nor by fact that limitations adapted to real estate only); Prescott v. Barker (1874), 9 Ch. App. 174 (provisions of will inconsistent with leaseholds being included). A contrary intention may be shown, for example, in a suitable context, by another gift of "all my leasehold estate" (Re Guyton and Rosenberg's Contract, [1901] 2 Ch. 591), or of "all my personal estate wheresoever situated" (Butler v. Butler (1884), 28 Ch. D. 66), but not by a mere gift of personal estate simply, or by a specific bequest of a specified leasehold (Re Davison, Greenwell v. Davison (1888), 58 L. T. 304).

(h) The result may be otherwise where the testator has no land in the named place, so that the words cannot have effect given to them in their technical sense (Inchley v. Robinson (1587), 3 Leon. 165 (land in A. included tithes); Ritch v. Sanders (1651), Sty. 261; Re Hodgson, Taylor v. Hodgson, [1898] 2 Ch. 545).

include advowsons in gross (i), or other incorporeal hereditaments (k), issuing out of land in that locality.

Money held on trust for investment in land as to which no effective election to reconvert the property has been made (l) is ordinarily included under a description of "land" or "real estate" generally (m), but not under a description of land in a restricted locality, where the restriction does not apply to the trust (n). A devise of land primâ facie includes whatever estate or interest the testator has in that land (o), except mortgage debts charged on the land or on any interest therein (p), but the latter may pass if the intention is shown (q), or if there is no other estate or interest to which the description can refer (r), as in the case where the testator, at the date of his will and of his death (s), was a mortgagee in possession (t), with no other interest in the land (a).

"Legacy."

1325. The term "legacy" or "bequest" in its ordinary sense is applied only to a gift of money or some chattel (b), but with a proper controlling context it is capable of meaning a devise of land (c).

"Money."

1326. A gift of the "living" of a certain church is ambiguous; it is sufficient to pass the advowson, but may be restricted to a single presentation, as where the will shows an intention that the devisee should have a benefit personal to himself and should himself be presented (d).

1327. In the case of a gift of the testator's "money," there is no strictly technical meaning of the word (c), but the ordinary meaning is primâ facie taken to be the meaning in a will if the circumstances of the case admit (f). In this ordinary sense the word includes cash and notes in hand (g), money immediately payable to the testator at call (h), and money at a bank on current account, or on deposit account, at all events where no long notice of withdrawal is required (i); but it does not include sums not immediately payable to the testator (h), stock or shares (l) or other choses in

With regard to money on deposit at a bank subject to a previous notice of withdrawal being given, it may pass under the term as modified by the context of the will or the circumstances: see Manning v. Bainbridge (1837), 9 Sim. 16 (residuary estate of another person); Bide v. Harrison (1873), L. N. 171 (money in savings bank); and see Re Butler, Le Bas v. Herbert, [1894] 3 Ch. 250, 251. As to "money in the funds," see p. 701, ante.

Where there is an exception from the gift of certain property not falling within the strict meaning of the term, there is ground for extending the meaning (In the Goods of White (1882), 7 P. D. 66; Re Buller, Buller v. Giberne (1896), 74 L. T. 406). The fact that the "money" was settled did not extend the meaning of the word in Lowe v. Thomas (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 315; but compare Prichard v. Prichard (1879), L. R. 11 Eq. 232.

(g) Re Sutton, Stone v. A.-G. (1885), 28 Ch. D. 464 (where the testatrix mentioned the amount); Chapman v. Reynolds (1860), 28 Beav. 221 (where the fact that the state of the property of the testatrix rendered it impossible that after payment of debts the bequest could have anything to operate upon was considered a reason for extending the meaning); see also Bevan v. Bevan (1880), 5 L. R. Ir. 57, C. A.; Masson v. Smellie (1903), 6 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 148.

Thus, it may include such investments as are readily turned into money; for example, stock was included in the term in the wills considered in Lynn v. Kerridge (1737), West temp. Hard. 172; Buckman v. Ives (1837), 6 L. J. (Ch.) 197; Waite v. Combes (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 676; Barclay v. Maskelyne (1858), 5 Jur. (N. S.) 12; Newman v. Newman (No. 1) (1858), 26 Beav. 218; Chapman v. Reynolds (1860), 28 Beav. 221; Re Dutton, Herbert v. Harrison (1869), 20 L. T. 386; Hart v. Hernandez (1885), 52 L. T. 217; Re Smith, Henderson-Roe v. Hutchins (1889), 42 Ch. D. 302; Re Adkins, Solomon v. Catchpole (1908), 98 L. T. 667; O'Connor v. O'Connor, [1911] 1 I. R. 263 (mortgages not able to be called in excluded). Where the gift is of money remaining after payment of debts, legacies, or both debts and legacies, either generally out of the estate or out of certain property, the gift is often construed as eiusdem generis with that made subject to the payment, and for this reason may pass the residuary personal estate, (Dicks v. Lambert (1799), 4 Ves. 725; Kendall v. Kendall (1828), 4 Russ. 360; Rogers v. Thomas (1837), 2 Keen, 8; Dawson v. Gaskoin (1837), 2 Keen, 14; Barrett v. White (1855), 1 Jur. (N. inaccurate, popular sense it is sufficient to include the whole (i) or the residue (k) of the personal (l) estate.

1328. "Ready money," in its ordinary sense, includes money on current account at a bank (m), or in the hands of an agent acting as banker (n), and money on deposit account at a bank where no notice of withdrawal is required (o); but it does not ordinarily include money on deposit account, where a substantial (p) previous notice of withdrawal is required (q) according to the usual course of business on deposit (r), or other choses in action generally (s).

R. 82; In the Goods of Bramley, [1902] P. 106; Re Rowland, Jones v. Rowland (1902), 86 L. T. 78. So, too, where the court has been influenced by the presumption against intestacy, the word "money" has taken in several cases a wide meaning; see Low v. Thomas (1854), Kay, 369, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 377; Boardman v. Stanley (1873), 7 L. R. Eq. 342; Re Cadogan, Cadogan v. Palagi, supra, per KAY, J., at p. 157; *Re Derbyshire, Webb v. L. R. 102. A specific gift coming after the gift in question may in some cases prevent it from being residuary (see Loice v. Thomas, supra), but is not conclusive against a residuary gift; see Re Pringle, Walker v. Stewart, supra, at p. 823; Re Townley, Townley v. Townley (1884), 50 L. T. 394; Re Maclean, Williams v. Nelson (1894), 11 T. L. R. 82. The fact that there is a residuary gift elsewhere in the will may rebut the inference that the gift of money is of a residuary nature (Hillis v. Plaskett (1841), 4 Beav. 208, 210; Williams v. Williams (1878), 8 Ch. D. 789, C. A.; Re Mann, Ford v. Ward, [1912] 1 Ch. 388, 391, distinguishing Re Adkins, Solomon v. Catchpole, supra).

R. 11 Eq. 232, MALINS, V.-C., at p. 235, said the words in that case could not be extended to the real estate, because of the favour shown to the heir-at-law; but see note (c), p. 667, ante.

(q) Mayne v. Mayne, supra (seven or ten days); Re Wheeler, Hankinson v. Hayter, [1904] 2 Ch. 66 (fourteen days).

(r) The waiver, by the bank, of the notice required does not make money so deposited "ready money" (Mayne v. Mayne, supra), unless it is the usual course of business (Re Rodmell, Safford v. Safford (1913), 108 L. T. 184), and a mere power to require notice for money, according to practice payable on demand, does not prevent money deposited from being ready money (Re Cosgrove's Estate, Wills v. Goddard (1909), Times, 3rd April). A common practice of waiver on terms was not considered sufficient in Re Friedman, Friedman v. Friedman (1908), 8 State Reports, New South Wales, 127.

1330. The term "securities" or "securities for money," according to its literal meaning, includes such moneys as are secured either on property (b) or on personal security (c) (including even promissory notes (d) and bills of exchange (e)), and any stock or other investment which by the terms of its creation is a security for the payment of money (f), but does not include moneys for which a mere acknowledgment of indebtedness has been given (g), or the ordinary description of stock and shares in a public company (h). The term "securities," however, is very commonly used as a synonym for investments, or property dealt with on the Stock Exchange, and this meaning may readily be attributed to the word (i), and generally other meanings may be given to it, according to the context of the will and the circumstances of the case (k).

"Shares."

1331. A bequest of "shares" in a particular company may pass such stock of the testator in that company which is of the same nature as and identical in substance with shares (l), but primâ facie (m) not stock issued as security, such as debentures or debenture stock (n). "Stock," however, does not primâ facie include shares (o).

"Stock."

1332. The meaning in various contexts of the following common terms has been discussed:—"articles of domestic use or ornament" (p); "carriages" (q); "debentures" (r); "fortune" (s);

Words sufficient to pass residue. Appointment of residuary legatee.

SUB-SECT. 7.—Residuary Gifts.

1333. Many words are, in a suitable context, capable of denoting the whole or the residue of the real and personal estate of the testator (i).

The appointment of any person to be "residuary legatee" primâ facie (k) only gives him the residue of the personal estate (l), but if the context or the circumstances require it may also pass the residue of the real estate (m).

includes the testator's real and personal estate and the whole of the testator's interest therein (Doe d. Wall v. Langlands (1811), 14 East, 370; Jones v. Skinner (1835), 5 L. J. (CH.) 87; Thomas v. Phelps (1828), 4 Russ. 348, 351; Saumarez v. Saumarez, De Navilland v. Saumarez (1839), 4 My. & Cr. 331, 338; Morrison v. Hoppe (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 234; Re Greenwich Hospital Improvement Act (1852), 20 Beav. 458; Lloyd v. Lloyd (1869), L. R. 7 Eq. 458; Cameron v. Harper (1892), 21 Canada Supreme Court Reports, 273).

(h) As to the technical meaning of the word, apart from the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 26, or a controlling context, see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 163. As to a devise of real estate as affected by the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), see pp. 508, 703, ante; in cases before the statute, leaseholds were not included, unless either the will showed an intention that they should be included, or there was no real estate for the gift to operate on in its ordinary sense (Swift v. Swift (1859), 1 De G. F. & J. 160, 170). For an example of a special meaning given to the word, see Evans v. Evans (1849), 17 Sim. 86 (certain tithes excluded).

(i) Blight v. Hartnoll (1883), 23 Ch. D. 218, 222, C.A. See, for example, Huxley v. Brooman (1785), 1 Bro. C. C. 437 ("all I am worth"); Doe d. Wall v. Langlands (1811), 14 East, 370 ("the residue of all my property goods and chattels"); Wilce v. Wilce (1831), 7 Bing. 664 ("everything else I die possessed of"); Green v. Dunn (1855), 20 Beav. 6 (all my freeholds not hereinbefore devised); Cogswell v. Armstrong (1855), 2 K. & J. 227 (all other real and personal estate); and compare Warner v. Warner (1851), 15 Jur. 141; Phillips v. Beal (1858), 25 Beav. 25; Re Greenwich Hospital Improvement Act (1855), 20 Beav. 458 ("all my . . . other property of every description"); Aitree v. Aitree (1871), L. R. 11 Eq. 280 ("all the rest"); Smyth v. Smyth (1878), 8 Ch. D. 561 ("all the rest, residue . . . and all other my effects"); compare Constable v. Bull (1849), 3 De G. & Sm. 411; Bibbens v. Potter (1879), 10 Ch. D. 733; Re Johnson, Sandy & Reilly (1905), 92 L. T. 357 ("the remainder of my household property"); Re Craven, Crewdson v. Craven (1908), 100 L. T. 284 (the rest of my investments). Even the phrase "etc." may suffice (Chapman v. Chapman (1876), 4 Ch. D. 800; Re Andrew's Estate, Creasy v. Graves (1902), 50 W. R. 471). As to "effects," see p. 700, ante; as to "estate," p. 701, ante.

(k) As when used alone or in a will which appears to make a distinction between real property and personal property (Singleton v. Tomlinson (1878), 3 App. Cas. 404, 417).

(l) Wills v. Wills (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 439; Kellett v. Kellett (1815), 3 Dow, 248, H. L., explained in Windus v. Windus (1856), 6 De G. M. & G. 549, 557, 558; Lea v. Grundy (1857), 1 Jur. The effect of a gift of general residue, and the property comprised in it, are dealt with elsewhere (n); similar rules hold good as to particular residuary gifts by way of general descriptions of particular kinds of property belonging to the testator remaining undisposed of (a). A direction that a share of residue shall immediately (as in cases of revocation (b) or lapse (c) of that share) or on any event (d) fall into residue primâ facie constitutes a gift of that share by way of addition to the other shares of residue.

SECT. 5.—Descriptions of Donees.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Time of Ascertaining the Donee.

(i.) In General.

1334. The ascertainment of the donee is an element in ascertaining the vesting of the gift; accordingly, the presumption in favour of early vesting (e) has been invoked, in doubtful cases, to assist in determining which of various persons was intended by a description which was capable of denoting any of them (f); but in general this presumption does not assist in finding out whom the testator intended as the objects of his bounty (g). An express direction as to vesting (for example, at a specified age) or a gift siderations.

The fact that parts of the real estate are specifically devised may be sufficient to give the residuary legatee the residue of the real estate (Hughes v. Pritchard (1877), 6 Ch. D. 24, C. A., explained in Re Methuen and Blore's Contract (1881), 16 Ch. D. 696, 700); but not where the residuary legatee is one of the specific devisees (Hillas v. Hillas (1847), 10 I. Eq. R. 134; Re Morris, Morris v. Atherden (1894), 71 L. T. 179; Re Gibbs, Martin v. Harding, [1907] 1 Ch. 465, 468). The fact that the testator had no real estate at the date of his will (Re Methuen and Blore's Contract (1881), 16 Ch. D. 696), or had no real estate other than that of which the will contains specific and complete dispositions (Re Gibbs, Martin v. Harding, supra), is against extending the meaning of "residuary legatee," though not conclusive on the point (Re Stephen, Stephen v. Stephen, [1913] W. N. 210, where Re Gibbs, Martin v. Harding, supra, is distinguished on the context of that case).

(n) See title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 280. As to the effect of two residuary gifts, see p. 678, ante.

(a) M'Kay v. M'Kay, [1900] 1 I. R. 213, 217 (residue of furniture etc.); Mason v. Ogden, [1903] A. C. 1 (residue of freeholds). App. 333 (hereditaments in a named parish), the descriptions were specific and not general.

(f) Radford v. Willis (1871), 7 Ch. App. 7, 10. The "rules of convenience" (see p. 715, post) are sometimes said to be directed to make the property vest as early as possible (Gimblett v. Purton (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 427, 430).

(g) Doe d. Smith v. Fleming (1835), 2 Cr. M. & R. 638, per Lord ABINGER, C.B., at p. 654: "it properly does no more than suggest the most desirable method of carrying that intention into effect when those objects are discovered, assuming that they can be ascertained."

SECT. 5.
Descriptions of Donees.

Individuals.

over is in general immaterial in ascertaining the class (h) unless it alters the description of the class (i).

1335. Where the donee is designated by a description which may at different times apply to different individuals, and the context does not point to any future time as the time at which the donee is to be ascertained, then primâ facie the only person who is entitled to take is the one who satisfied the description at the date of the will (k) if there was any person who to the knowledge of the testator then satisfied it (l). Where the context shows that the donee is to be ascertained in the future, but does not show at what specific time, then the first person to satisfy the description is presumed to be intended (m). The context may, however, show that the donee in each case is to be ascertained at the death of the testator, or some other definite future time.

Classes, when context clear.

1336. The words of the will may clearly indicate the point of time at which the class is to be ascertained; thus, in a gift to children "now living" only those in existence at the date of the will can take, and all children born after that date are excluded (n); in a gift to children living at the death of the testator or any other person (a), or at any particular future time (b), or to children now born or to

D. 783, C. A. Where life interests are given to several persons in succession, and on the death of the last-named person there is a gift to a class of persons "then living," the word "then" is generally to be taken as referring grammatically to the death of that person, even where such be born during the lifetime of their named parent(c), the time of ascertaining the class is fixed by the express words of the will. In all such cases there is no room for the application of any canons of construction.

SECT. 5.
Descriptions of Donees.

1337. There is no rule that where there is a gift to a class on a contingent event the time of happening of the contingency determines the individuals composing the class(d); the circumstances, however, is to be taken into consideration in combination with other indications of the testator's intention to be found in other parts of his will(e), and on the whole context of the will the description of the class may be varied and the contingency applied to the class(f).

To class on a contingency.

1338. Where, however, it cannot be gathered, from the context and circumstances of the case, what time is referred to for ascertaining a class, the court acts upon certain canons of construction, which have been framed for the convenience of the donees and of the administration of the property, and have accordingly been called rules of convenience(g).

Rules of convenience applicable in other cases.

1339. The first rule of convenience is as follows:—

A class(h) is prima facie composed of those members (if any) death took place before the death of the testator (Archer v. Jagon (1837), 8 Sim. 446; Re Milne, Grant v. Heysham (1888), 57 L. T. 828, C. A.; Palmer v. Open, [1894] 1 I. R. 32). For examples of cases where "then" was referred to the death of the testator or other period of distribution, see Gaskell v. Holmes (1844), 3 Hare, 438; Widdicombe v. Miller (1853), 1 Drew. 443).

(c) Scott v. Scarborough (Earl) (1838), 1 Beav. 154.

(d) Boulton v. Beard (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 608, C. A., per TURNER, L.J., at p. 612; Hickling v. Fair, [1899] A. C. 15, per Lord DAVEY, at p. 35.

(e) Selby v. Whittaker (1877), 6 Ch. D. 239, C. A., per BAGGALLAY, L.J., at p. 250.

(f) Ibid. Thus, in a gift, if a named person should leave any child, to all his children, the class is not restricted to children whom he leaves at his death (Boulton v. Beard, supra; M'Lachlan v. Tait (1860), 2 De G. F. & J. 449; as to the application of the rule in Emperor v. Rolfe (1749), 1 Ves. Sen. 208, to wills, see p. 671, ante). But the context may show the contrary, as, for instance, if the gift is to "such" children (Sheffield v. Kennitt (1859), 4 De G. & J. 593; Re Watson's Trusts (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 36), or is to "vest" (used in its legal sense) at the death of the parent (Selby v. Whittaker (1877), 6 Ch. D. 239, C. A.; see also Wilson v. Mount (1854), 19 Beav. 292 (gift over, if no "such" issue)).

(g) Re Emmet's Estate, Emmet v. Emmet (1880), 13 Ch. D. 484, C. A.; Re Powell, Grosland v. Holliday, [1898] 1 Ch. 227, per KEKEWICH, J., at p. 230. The rules are admittedly "not founded on any view of the testator's intention" (Re Emmet's Estate, Emmet v. Emmet, supra, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 490; Re Roberts, Kepington v. Roberts-Gavens (1881), 19 Ch. D. 520, 527, C. A.), and are "artificial" (Leake v. Robinson (1817), 2 Mer. 363, per GRANT, M.R., at p. 383). The rules generally for ascertainment of a class, both as to personal property and real property, are said to be founded on the presumption that only persons in being are intended to take (Ellison v. Airey (1748), 1 Ves. Sen. 111, 114; Crone v. Odell (1811), 1 Ball & B. 449, 459, affirmed, sub nom. Odell v. Crone (1815), 3 Dow, 61, H. L.; Bartleman v. Murchison (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 136, 140). As to the rules for ascertaining a class taking in default of appointment under a power, see title POWERS, Vol. XXIII., p. 71. As to implied gifts to the objects of an unexercised power of selection, see ibid., p. 70.

(h) As to what kinds of classes are subject to this rule, see p. 720, post.

existing ascertainable and capable of taking (i) at the death of the testator (k); but where the period of distribution is at a later date, the class opens so as to let in all those members coming into existence before the period of distribution (l). Where, however, the gift is immediate, but at the death of the testator no member of the class has yet come into existence, then all the members of the class who are born at any future period primâ facie are intended to take under the gift (a).

As regards members of a class who die before the testator, the class is ascertained independently of them, and there is no question of lapse of their shares (b), and they are not included (c); nor where they are issue of the testator do they take by leaving issue living at the death of the testator, even where the class consists of but one person (d). 1340. The period of distribution may be postponed either by some prior gift, or by the nature of the property given, or by the conditions attached to the gift. Period of distribution.

In cases where the gift is postponed to a life estate the period of distribution is usually, but not necessarily, the determination of the life estate (h); but the existence of a mere charge on a fund, for example an annuity charged on it, does not necessarily affect the time for ascertaining the period of distribution (i). In gifts postponed by life interests.

If there is a prior life interest determinable on bankruptcy and there is no extension of the class of children let in, the class is fixed at the time of bankruptcy (k); but where the limitation over to the class after the life interest postpones payment until the death of the life tenant (l), or expressly directs the property to be applicable in the same manner as if the life tenant were dead (m), In gifts postponed by determinable life interests.

this extends the class so as to let in those coming into existence until the death.

In certain cases where a life interest has been determinable on remarriage, and the gift over expressly referred only to the death of the life tenant, but the court construed the gift over as impliedly intended to take effect on the remarriage (n), the class of children has been held to be ascertained at the remarriage, although expressly described as to be ascertained at the death (o).

In gifts of
property.

1341. Where the property is reversionary the period of distribution may be postponed until it falls into possession (p); but there is no postponement in case of a gift of a residue which includes a reversionary interest with other property (q).

In gifts postponed by the conditions
attached.

1342. The second rule of convenience deals with the determination of the period of distribution where the gift is of the corpus of property (r) and is postponed by reason of the conditions attached to it, as where payment is to be made on the attainment of a specified age by the donee (s), or on his or her marriage (t), or in other cases, it appears, where such conditions are of a nature personal to the donees; this rule is as follows:—

The rule in Andrews v.
Partington.

Where the postponement of enjoyment is due to conditions attached to the gift, the period of distribution is considered to be as soon as the conditions are so far performed that some one member of the class would be entitled to the enjoyment of his share, if the class were then not susceptible of increase (u). Thus, where there is an immediate gift to a class, to be paid on their attaining a specified age, the period of distribution is the death of the testator, if any member of the class has then attained that age (v), and if not, at the time of the first occasion when a member attains that age (a).

1843. This rule is adopted to reconcile the inconsistent directions of the will that all the children should take, but that the fund should be divided at a time when the class cannot be ascertained (b), and is not applied unless it is necessary (c), or unless it will fit in with the other provisions of the will (d). Thus, it is not applied where the provisions of the will are inconsistent with any right of the first child, attaining the specified age or satisfying the conditions, to payment of his share (c); as in cases where there is an effective direction, extending beyond the time when a child first attains the specified age or satisfies the conditions, to accumulate income (f), or to allow maintenance or advancement (g).

Titcomb v. Butler (1830), 3 Sim. 417; Balm v. Balm (1830), 3 Sim. 492; Blease v. Burgh (1840), 2 Beav. 221; Robley v. Ridings (1847), 11 Jur. 813; Re Mervin, Mervin v. Crossman, [1891] 3 Ch. 197; Re Knapp's Settlement, Knapp v. Vassall, [1895] 1 Ch. 91. The rule is accordingly termed the rule in Andrews v. Partington (1791), 3 Bro. C. C. 401, where Lord THURLOW, L.C., treated the rule as already established, though, as pointed out in Prescott v. Long (1795), 2 Ves. 690, per Lord LOUGHBOROUGH, at p. 692, it does not appear what are the cases he referred to; the rule, however, appears to be applied in Gilmore v. Severn (1785), 1 Bro. C. C. 582. A child en ventre sa mère when the eldest attains the specified age is included in the class (Trustees, Executors and Agency Co., Ltd. v. Sleeman (1899), 25 Victorian Law Reports, 187; see pp. 740 et seq. post).

Beevor* (1849), 8 Hare, 43, per WIGRAM, V.-C., at p. 49; but see Mann v. Thompson (1854), Kay, 638, where WOOD, V.-C., at p. 641, appears not to concur in this view. This rule has often been criticised; it is not part of the law of Scotland, which in other respects appears to be similar to the law of England with regard to the ascertainment of the donee: in Scotland all the children are included; see Hope Johnstone v. Sinclair's Trustees (1904), 7 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 25, per Lord McLAREN, at p. 30. In Andrews v. Partington, supra, Lord THURLOW, L.C., at p. 404, said that there was no greater inconvenience in the case of a devise than in that of a marriage settlement, where nobody doubted that the same expression meant all the children; and see note (c), infra.

(c) Re Stephens, Kilby v. Betts, supra, per BUCKLEY, J., at p. 328. The rule has been applied to similar gifts to children in a voluntary settlement (Re Knapp's Settlement, Knapp v. Vassall, supra); in the case of a marriage settlement there is no necessity for the application of the rule in such a case, as the court may rely on the presumption in favour of all the children of the settlor being included (Mann v. Thompson, supra, at p. 642; but see Re Knapp's Settlement, Knapp v. Vassall, supra, per NORTH, J., at p. 99).

(d) The rule, however, is not excluded by the fact that the class is described as "all" or "all and every" the children of a person; see Andrews v. Partington, supra; Prescott v. Long, supra.

(e) Compare Re Kipping, Kipping v. Kipping, [1914] 1 Ch. 62, C. A.; Macculloch v. Anderson, [1904] A. C. 55, 61.

Betts*, supra; Re Stevens, Trustees, Executors and Agency Co., Ltd. v. Teague, [1912] Victorian Law Reports, 194, 201, 202. This may not be the case where the direction for accumulation is ineffective, owing to the rights of beneficiaries to determine it and take the property free from accumulation (Curtis v. Curtis (1814), Madd. & G. 14, Coventry v. Coventry (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 470; see p. 588, ante).

Possible failure as result of rule.

Directions not excluding rule.

Classes subject to the rules.

Where the application of the rule would cause the gift to the class, or any other gift in the will connected with it, to fail as being contrary to law (for example, under the rule against perpetuities), and some other construction is possible under the will (h) by which all the gifts take effect, it appears that the rule is not applied, but that the alternative construction is adopted (i).

The rule may, however, be applied notwithstanding that there is a previous life interest (k), unless the testator shows that the expiration of that life interest is intended by him to be the period of distribution (l).

The rule applies both where the gift and direction as to payment are distinct, so that the gift is not contingent (m), and where the gift is contingent upon attaining the specified age (n) or other event, or subject to a gift over in any such event (o).

1344. These rules of convenience apply to a gift to a class of children, whosoever may be the parent, whether the testator or any other person, alive or dead (p), and, it appears, to any other description of a class (q) which in the context and circumstances of payments at the time when the right to receive income first accrues to any member of the class, except in cases where other considerations require it (b).

1346. The case of gifts of realty alone remains to be considered. If the gift to the class is construed to be immediate upon the death of the testator, that is the time when the class is ascertained if any members of the class then have come into being (c). A devise not otherwise postponed to "all and every" the children of a person is construed as immediate and the class is ascertained at the testator's death (d).

Limitations
 in futuro.

1347. Classes which take under a limitation which can take effect by way of legal remainder must be ascertained in accordance with the rules of law (e) at the time of the death of the testator letting in all who come into existence and take a vested interest on or before the natural determination of the particular estate (f). Other limitations not taking effect at the testator's death must take effect, if at all, as executory devises (g). In the case of an executory devise to a class of children who attain a specified age, the court finds no reason, as there is in the case of personal estate, for cutting down the class of takers by excluding children born after a child has attained that age; and it seems that all the children, whenever born, who attain that age, will be included (h).

(b) Re Stephens, Kilby v. Betts, [1904] 1 Ch. 322. In Re Powell, Crossland v. Holliday, [1898] 1 Ch. 227 (gift of real estate), the class was thus closed, but if the ordinary rule had been applied a subsequent gift would have been void under the rule against perpetuities. KEKEWICH, J., thought that in Re Wenmoth's Estate, Wenmoth v. Wenmoth (1887), 37 Ch. D. 266, it was not considered whether it would be right to depart from the rule as to children being ascertained at the testator's death, because they were only interested in income, or for any other reason. In so far as Re Powell, Crossland v. Holliday, supra, purports to lay down a general rule of construction, it is dissented from in Re Carter, Walker v. Litchfield (1911), 30 New Zealand Law Reports, 707, C. A. See also *Mogg v. The rule was applied to gifts of income in Re Powell, Crossland v. Holliday, supra, at p. 230; see note (b), supra. If no members of the class have yet come into being at the death of the testator the gift must take effect as an executory devise, and all members, whenever born, will be let in (*Weld v. In a gift not otherwise postponed, a description of a class of children as "born and to be born," or "begotten and to be begotten," may cause the gift to take effect as an executory devise, and accordingly all the children, whether in existence at the testator's death or otherwise, may take under the gift (i).

generally.

In an executory devise to a class on the death of any person or on any other postponed event which does not import contingency in the class, the donees are prima facie ascertained so as to let in all who come into existence and satisfy the description before that event (k). In a gift to a class, not postponed otherwise than by the fact that the description may refer to persons yet to come into existence and that no member of the class has come into existence at the testator's death, all the members of the class coming into existence at any time are let in (l).

1348. Where a gift carrying intermediate income, such as a gift of residuary personal estate (m), is made to a contingent class, if members of the class attain a transmissible interest on coming into existence, whether subject or not to being diminished in any event, the members for the time being in existence share the income (n), while if members attain a transmissible interest on attaining a certain age or satisfying some other description or condition, a member of the class attaining a transmissible interest takes only the income of the share to which he would be entitled if the other members of the class for the time being in existence (o) had attained transmissible interests (p); but if a gift not carrying intermediate income, such as a gift of real estate, is made to such a class, the members of the class whose interests are transmissible for the time being take the whole income (g).

(iv.) Groups of Individuals.

1349. If the gift is immediate and is a separate bequest of specific amount to each one of a group of certain children, who are to take as individuals and not as a class, primâ facie only those in existence at the testator's death can take, and those coming into existence afterwards are excluded (r). The fact that at the date of the will or of the testator's death there are no members of the group in existence does not render future members admissible (s). If such a gift is postponed, all those who come into existence before the time of distribution are let in (t). The rule is grounded on the inconvenience of postponing distribution until all the children who might be born and the total amount of their bequests could be ascertained (u), and accordingly does not apply where by the provisions of the will this inconvenience does not exist (w), or is expressly contemplated by the testator (x).

Ascertainment of survivors at period of distribution.

1351. In cases where there is a gift to a number of persons and the survivors (c) and survivor of them, or with benefit of survivorship or in like words (d), or where there is a postponed gift to persons "surviving," the survivorship is, in default of any expressed intention of the testator (e), prima facie referred to the period of distribution (f). Thus, the time in question, where the gift is immediate, is the death of the testator (g), and where the gift is postponed to a life estate, is the death of the tenant for life (h) or death of the testator, whichever last happens (i); and this applies whether the gift is of real or of personal estate (k).

In Re Benn, Benn v. Benn (1885), 29 Ch. D. 839, C. A., however, COTTON, L.J., at p. 844, said that there was no canon of construction as to the period to which survivorship is referred except that in an immediate gift it was to be referred to the death of the testator, and if there is a life estate, to the determination of the life estate. In certain early cases survivorship was held, even in a postponed gift, to refer to the testator's death; see Rose d. Vere v. Hill (1766), 3 Burr, 1881; Wilson v. Bayly (1760), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 195; Doe d. Long v. Prigg (1823), 8 B. & C. 231; but the rule in Cripps v. Wolcott, supra, has been constantly followed in England, and in Scotland has been approved by the House of Lords (Young v. Robertson (1862), 4 Macq. 314, H. L., where Lord WESTBURY, L.C., stated, at p. 319, that the rule of construction is the same in the jurisprudence of both England and Scotland; Bowman v. Bowman, [1899] A. C. 518, 525, 526).

SECT. 5.

Descriptions of Donees.

Survivorship on contingent event.

1352. In cases where there is a gift to several persons, followed by an express contingent gift over on any event to the survivors or survivor, the survivorship may be independent of both the contingent event and the period of distribution (l), or, on the other hand, may refer either to the period of distribution (m) or to the contingent event (n), according to the context in the particular case.

Other senses of word "survivors."

1353. The word "survivors," however, and similar words may be used in other than the strict sense; thus, in a set of dispositions in favour of several persons and their children or issue, they may be used in a sense in which the element of survivorship involves not a survivorship between the named persons, but the subsistence of a line of children or issue, or of vested estates and interests (o), or they may be used as meaning "others" (p). Such words may receive one of these constructions where the context requires it, but not otherwise (q). Thus, after a gift to several children in tail, a gift over on the death of any of them without issue indefinitely to the "survivors" in tail is construed as to the "others," creating cross-remainders (r). Where the gift is to several persons equally for their respective lives and after the death of any to his children, but if any die without children to the survivors for life (s), with remainder to their children, without more(t), only children of survivors in the ordinary sense can, as a rule, take under the gift over(u). If, however, to similar gifts there is added a limitation over if all the tenants for life die without children, then the children of a predeceased tenant for life may participate in the share of one who dies without children after their parent(w).

(l) Referring only to survivorship between the named persons (White v. Baker (1860), 2 De G. F. & J. 55). The court leans against a construction involving a gift of the whole to the last survivor, particularly where there are words indicating a tenancy in common, and attempts to discover a time to which the survivorship is referable (*Cambridge v. (s) If in such a case the survivors take absolutely, there may be ground for reading survivors, in respect of the last, as "longest liver," as in Maden v. Taylor (1876), 45 L. J. (CH.) 569, followed in Davidson v. Kimpton (1881), 18 Ch. D. 213; Re Roper's Estate, Morrell v. Gissing (1889), 41 Ch. D. 409; but see King v. Frost (1890), 15 App. Cas. 548, 553; Re Mortimer, Griffiths v. Mortimer (1885), 54 L. J. (CH.) 414; Askew v. Askew (1888), 57 L. J. (CH.) 629.

tions of

In a case where all the shares in the property are settled and there is a general clause of accruer on the death of each tenant for life without children, all the accrued shares being settled in the same way as the original shares, and these dispositions are followed by a gift over in the event of all dying without issue, there is sufficient evidence of an intention not to use the word "survivors" in its proper sense, but to use it in the sense of those who survive either in person or figuratively in issue(x).

Stipital

D. 525, 531 (the first rule in this case). A contrary intention in favour of issue may be shown by a substitutional gift, but the word "survivors" may nevertheless have its ordinary meaning (Willets v. Willets (1848), 7 Hare, 38; Hodge v. Foot (1865), 34 Beav. 349; Blundell v. Chapman (1864), 33 Beav. 648; Re Hobson, Barwick v. Holt, [1912] 1 Ch. 626, 633), and without construing "survivors" as "others," the words "their issue" may mean the issue not of surviving children only, but of all the children (Re Corbett's Trusts (1860), John. 591, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 598; Re Bowman, Re Lay, Whytehead v. Boulton, supra, at p. 529).

R. 459, 495, C. A. The inference made from the gift over, in pursuance of the presumption against intestacy (see p. 665, ante), is that the objects of the testator's bounty previously named shall between them take the entire estate in every state of circumstances consistent with the gift over not taking effect (O'Brien v. O'Brien, supra, at p. 466). Children of predeceased tenants for life do not take merely on account of a direction that accruing shares are to be taken in the same manner as original shares; a rule to the contrary laid down in Re Bowman, Re Lay, Whytehead v. Boulton, supra, at p. 532, is disapproved in Harrison v. Harrison, supra; Inderwick v. Tatchell, Tatchell v. Tatchell, Inderwick v. Inderwick, [1901] 2 Ch. 738, C. A.; S. A.; Re Bilham, Buchanan v. Hill, [1901] 2 Ch. 169. The fact that some only of the shares are settled (Lucena v. Lucena (1877), 7 Ch. D. 255, C. A.), or that the ultimate gift over is on the death without issue of some only of the first takers (Re Hobson, Barwick v. Holt, [1912] 1 Ch. 626, 633), is not sufficient to give this meaning. In older cases the word was in such cases said to be construed "others" (Holland v. Allsop (1861), 29 Beav. 498; Re Keep's Will (1863), 32 Beav. 122; Hurry v. Morgan (1866), L. (CH.) 629); but in many of these cases all the other stocks were in fact surviving (Re Bilham, Buchanan v. Hill, supra, per JORCE, J., at p. 175); and as pointed out in Waite v. Littlewood, supra, by LORD SELBORNE, L.C., at pp. 73, 74, it is not necessary to adopt the meaning "others" in such cases; it is sufficient to read "survivors"

Similarly, a gift over to the "others" (y), or to those "remaining" (a) of a number of persons after a gift to each or one of them, is not read as meaning "survivors," unless it is necessary in the context (b).

1354. Two or more gifts may be made to take effect alternatively, as, for example, in certain mutually exclusive events (c); thus, a gift to A. or B., where A. and B. are donees, described or named, and mutually exclusive (d), is an alternative gift. In the expression of such a gift there is generally a contingency implied, even if not expressed; the court cannot in general give effect to such a gift unless first informed as to who are the alternative donees, and as to what is the relationship between them, and generally as to the circumstances, so as to be able to determine what that implied contingency is (e). If such a contingency could as meaning "surviving in person or in stirps" (Wake v. Varah (1876), 2 Ch. D. 348, C. A., per JAMES, L.J., at p. 358). This construction, however, has been dissented from in Ireland (O'Brien v. O'Brien, [1896] 2 I. R. 459, C. A.), and has been described as "forced and fanciful" (King v. Frost, Underwood v. Frost, Price v. Frost, Plomley v. Frost (1890), 15 App. Cas. 548, P. C., per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 553); and it is not clear that the word "survivor" can properly be so construed, unless the limitations are expressly framed so as to produce that result (Re Hobson, Barwick v. Holt, [1912] 1 Ch. 626, per PARKER, J., at pp. 632, 633). For a similar case where on the context of the will the ordinary meaning of the word was adhered to, see Browne v. Rainsford (1867), 1 I. R. Eq. 384.

(y) Re Chaston, Chaston v. Seago (1881), 18 Ch. D. 218, 223 (there held to mean "children other than children who die or have died without leaving lawful issue"); *Slade v. T. 128, C. A.) or "others" (Re Arnold's Trusts (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 252 (but as to this case see now the cases cited in note (u), p. 727, ante)).

(c) It has first to be determined in all cases whether the second gift (as, for example, where it is to take effect on death of the first donee without issue, or leaving issue) takes effect by way of succession to the first gift, or is an alternative to the first gift (Ware v. Watson (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 248, 258; and see Hatch v. Hatch (1855), 20 Beav. 105; Parsons v. Coke (1858), 4 Drew. 296). An executory limitation to take effect on the donee dying under certain circumstances, as, for example, leaving no issue, may take effect on the death of the donee under those circumstances during the life of the testator, and therefore as a substitutional gift; see pp. 729, 730, post. As to the effect of successive limitations of personality to unborn persons by means of estates tail, see pp. 768, 770, post.

(d) There may be cases, such as gifts to "heirs or next of kin," where the terms are used as applying to one class, and not as alternative (Lowndes v. Stone (1799), 4 Ves. 649; Re Thompson's Trusts (1878), 9 Ch. D. 607). If B. is the general term for a large class (namely, "descendants") of which A. is an enumeration of members, or a sub-class (namely, "children"), and the gift is to "each of A. or B.," the gift is not void but includes all B.; and "or" need not be altered; see Solly v. Solly (1859), 5 Jur. (N. S.) 36; Olav v. Pennington (1835), 7 Sim. 370.

(e) See note (c), p. 646, ante.

not be implied, the gift, read as such, without alteration (f), where A. and B. are mutually exclusive, would be void for uncertainty (g), unless it were either charitable, in which case the court is able to determine the mode in which the gift is to take effect (h), or made by way of a power of appointment (i).

SECT. 5.
Descriptions
of Donees.

1355. The contingency which is generally expressed or implied in alternative gifts refers to the death of the first-named donee before some particular period, for example the death of the testator or some other period of distribution; it is inferred that the intention of the testator is that the first donee is to take if then alive, and that the second donee is to take if the first does not survive the particular period (k).

Contingency to which alternative gifts refer.

It is not necessary that the gift should be expressed disjunctively; thus, a gift to a class of persons living at some particular time and the issue of such of them as are then dead is also an alternative gift (l).

Conjunctive alternative

1356. In whatever language an alternative gift is expressed, it may, according to its construction, be either original or substitutional (m). A gift is alternative and substitutional where the (f) "Or" may be altered to "and" if necessary, and in accordance with the whole will (Richardson v. Spragg (1718), 1 P. Wms. 434; Eccard v. Brooke (1790), 2 Cox, Eq. Cas. 213; Horridge v. Ferguson (1822), Jac. 583; Parkin v. Knight (1846), 15 Sim. 83; Re Turney, Turney v. Turney, [1899] 2 Ch. 739, 745, C. A.; see, generally, p. 676, ante); but this is not done if the gift can be read as a substitutional gift on some contingency (Speakman v. Speakman (1850), 8 Hare, 180); and see note (k), infra.

(g) Richardson v. Spragg, supra, per JEKYL, M.R., at p. 434; Longmore v. Broome (1802), 7 Ves. 124, per GRANT, M.R., at p. 128; Flinn v. Warren (1847), 15 Sim. 626, 629; as to uncertainty generally, see p. 678, ante.

(i) Longmore v. Broome, supra. In such a case, where there is no appointment and no gift over in default of appointment, the gift goes to the donees A. and B. equally (Penny v. Turner (1848), 2 Ph. 493; Re White's Trusts (1860), John. 656); see, generally, title POWERS, Vol. XXI., pp. 70, 71.

(k) Salisbury v. Petty (1843), 3 Hare, 86, 93; Carey v. Carey (1857), 6 I. Ch. R. 255; Walmsley v. Foxhall (1863), 1 De G. J. & Sm. 605; Re Pearce, Eastwood v. Pearce (1912), 56 Sol. Jo. 361; compare Bowman v. Bowman, [1899] A. C. 518, 523, where "or" was held to mean "whom failing," and Lord WATSON, at p. 523, said that the point to be determined was at what period of time the testator must be held to have intended that the right of the institute should come to an end if he was not then alive, and that the right of the conditional institute should emerge. Thus, a gift to A., with a substitutional gift to his children or to his issue, takes effect in favour of A. if he is living at the period of distribution (Montagu v. Nucella (1826), 1 Russ. 165; Jones v. Torin (1833), 6 Sim. 255; Whitcher v. Penley (1846), 9 Beav. 477; Shipchase v. Simpson (1849), 16 Sim. 485; Penley v. Penley (1850), 12 Beav. 547; Sparks v. Restal (1857), 24 Beav. 218; Margitson v. Hall (1864), 10 Jur. (N. S.) 89; Holland v. Wood (1870), L. R. 11 Eq. 91), and in favour of his children or issue if he is not then living (Davenport v. Hanbury (1796), 3 Ves. 257; Girdlestone v. Doe (1828), 2 Sim. 225 (A. or his heirs); Salisbury v. Petty, supra; Re Porter's Trusts (1867), 4 K. & J. 188).

interest which the alternative donee is to take is by a prior clause in the will given to the first donee (n), so that the second donee merely stands in the place of the first if the latter is not capable of taking on the particular contingency in contemplation. A gift is alternative and original where the interest which the second donee is to take is not by a prior clause given to the first donee (o).

In the case of a devise to a person and his heirs (p), or to a person and the heirs of his body (q), or of a bequest to a person, his executors or administrators (r), the gifts are not substitutional, and the death of the named person in the life of the testator does not enable the heirs or the executors or administrators to take as purchasers under the will (s).

1357. In the case of a gift, whether immediate or postponed, to a person or to a group of individuals (t), a substitutional gift applying thereto as a rule takes effect on the death of the prior donee before the death of the testator, or other period of distribution (a), even where the prior donee is dead at the date of the will (b). An exception arises in the case of postponed gifts (c) to a legatee "or his executors or administrators" or to a legatee "or his representatives" where these words have their technical sense (d); in such a case the presumption is that the gift is simply another way of giving the legatee a vested interest on the testator's death, and is not a substitutional gift (e); and the representatives do not take if the legatee dies in the life of the testator (f).

1358. In cases where the original gift is to a class the testator is prima facie considered to refer to living persons, and not to persons already dead at the date of his will (g). Where the gift is immediate and not postponed, a substitutional gift on the death of any of the class to a corresponding substituted donee in general takes effect on the death, before the death of the testator, of any who were living at the date of the will, and who if they had survived would have taken as members of the class (h). The substitutional gift, however, fails where the corresponding original member of the class was dead at the date of the will and therefore could not have taken as a member of the class under the will (i). Thus, if the original donees are a class of parents, and there is a substitutional gift of each parent's share to the children of that parent and one parent is dead at the date of the will, the children of that parent cannot take (k).

children.

1359. The gift to the children, however, may be that they are to take, not simply the share of their parent, but the share of their parent computed on the hypothesis that he would have taken under the original gift; a gift in such a form constitutes an independent original gift to such children and not a gift by way of substitution, and the children may take although their parent is dead at the date of the will (l).

168; and see Re Turner (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 501. Similarly in case of a postponed gift to "A. or his heirs," where the word "heirs" is used in the sense of "representatives" (Tidwell v. Ariel (1818), 3 Madd. 403), but not where the word is used in the sense of persons entitled as on intestacy; in such a case the heirs take as personæ designatæ (Re Porter's Trusts (1857), 4 K. & J. 188).

SECT. 5.
Description of Donees.

Further, even where the children are expressed to take only their parent's share, the class of children, according to the construction of the whole will, may be ascertained, not by reference to those parents only who could take under the original gift to parents, but by reference to all the parents, whether eventually capable of taking or not; this, again, is an original gift to such children (m).

Composite class of parents and issue.

1360. In cases where the gift is framed as a gift to a composite class, formed of a class of parents living at a certain period and a class of children of parents then dead, there is primâ facie (n) an independent and original gift to the latter class of children, and children of parents who were dead before the date of the will may take (o) as well as children of parents who died after the date of the will but before the testator.

Postponed gifts to a

1361. In the case of a postponed substitutional gift, where the donees under the original gift are a class, and the substitutional gift corresponds to the various members of that class, the testator is considered to be providing for the death of members of the class, between his own death or the time of ascertainment of the class and the period of distribution or the time when the gift is to come into possession (p). Accordingly, it is primâ facie only in respect of persons who are ascertained as members of the class, and capable of taking under the gift, that substitution is effected (q), and as to those who die before the testator or before the time when the class is to be ascertained, the substitutional gift fails (r). If, however, there is no gap between the time of ascertainment of the class and the time of distribution, persons substituted for donees dying in the life of the testator, even before the date of the will, may be let in (s).

Donees.

On the other hand, a postponed alternative gift may be so framed that the donees are to take as original and not substitutional donees, for example, on the hypothesis that the persons for whom they are alternative were ascertained members of the class of first donees; and accordingly these alternative donees may take in such a case, although the members of the class of first donees predeceased the testator (t).

Original

gift.

1362. Conditions attaching to a gift do not prima facie attach to a gift alternative to it, whether original or substitutional (u), although in the case of substitutional gifts it may much more easily be inferred that they attach than in the case of alternative original gifts (w). Thus, it is not in general necessary, unless the testator so provides, that an alternative donee should survive the period of distribution in order to take, whether the gift is original (x) or substitutional (y); nor in an alternative and original gift is it in general necessary, unless the testator so provides, that the alternative donee should survive the person for whom he is alternative (a) : in a substitutional gift, on the other hand, it is in general necessary that the substituted donee should survive the person for whom he is substituted (b).

1363. Subject to the above, the class of substituted donees is ascertained according to the usual rules (c). Whether the members of classes taking under original and substituted gifts may take concurrently depends on the correspondence between the members of those classes respectively. A gift to a class of parents or their children, or parents or their issue, is construed as substituting for each parent his own children or issue, wherever the context allows that construction (d); thus, when there are words denoting an intention to divide the property into shares for the purpose of substitution (e), the parents surviving the period of distribution and the children or issue of parents dying before that period (f) then take concurrently. Otherwise, where the original and substitutional gifts are both to classes, and there is nothing indicative of a substitution for a member of the original class of a corresponding member of the substituted class (g), the gifts are mutually exclusive, and if any member of the original class survives the period of distribution, no member of the substituted class can take (h).

In the absence of a contrary intention being shown (i), the substituted donees as between themselves are joint tenants (k), even where the original donees are tenants in common, and therefore as 1364. In cases where the alternative gift fails by reason of the event not having happened on which it is to take effect, then the prior gift to the first donee may take effect although he was not living at the period of distribution (l), because the alternative gift operates as a divesting gift only (m).

In the case of a gift to a group or class, a substitutionary gift of the shares of such as die leaving issue to their issue does not affect the shares of those who die without leaving issue (n).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Description by Relationship.

1365. A description of a donee by reference to relationship to the testator or other person (as in the case of gifts to children, issue, and the like) is presumed to refer only to legitimate and not illegitimate relatives (o). The rule applies to all descriptions of donees, including the children (p), nephews (q), nieces (r), cousins (s), or relations generally (t) of the person concerned. This meaning is adhered to (a), and the illegitimate relatives do not satisfy the description (b), unless either from the circumstances (c) it is impossible that any legitimate relative could satisfy it (d), or an intention to include illegitimate relatives appears in the will (e)

(t) Re Deakin, Starkey v. Eyres, [1894] 3 Ch. 565.

(a) No mere conjecture, however probable, based on the testator's knowledge of or intimacy with the illegitimate persons can exclude the rule (Hill v. Crook (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 265, 276; Re Pearce, Alliance Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Francis, [1914] 1 Ch. 254, C. A., overruling Re De Bochet, Mansell v. Allen, [1901] 2 Ch. 441).

(b) The rule applies to descriptions not only in direct gifts, but in a gift over (Smith v. Johnson (1888) 59 L. T. 397).

(c) The circumstances at the date of the will are considered, and if the intention is shown thereby that illegitimate children are included, the construction is not varied by subsequent events, such as the circumstances existing at the date of a confirmatory codicil (Wilkinson v. Adam (1823) 12 Price, 470, H. L.; Mortimer v. West (1827), 3 Russ. 370).

(d) Hill v. Crook (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 265, 283; as, for instance, where no legitimate children were in existence, and the testator must, in the circumstances, be presumed to have contemplated the illegitimate relatives as satisfying the description and being able to take under an immediate gift (Beachcroft v. Beachcroft (1816), 1 Madd. 430; Woodhouselee (Lord) v. Dalrymple (1817), 2 Mer. 419 (children of a deceased person); Wilkinson v. Adam (1812), 1 Ves. & B. 422, 468; Dilley v. Matthews (1865), 11 Jur. (N. S.) 425; Savage v. Robertson (1868), L. R. 7 Eq. 176 (description of mother by her maiden name); Laker v. Hordern (1875), 1 Ch. D. 644; Re Haseldine, Grange v. Sturdy (1886), 31 Ch. D. 511; In the Estate of Frogley, [1905] P. 137; O'Loughlin v. Bellew, [1906] 1 I. R. 487). There is no such inference where, although no legitimate children were in existence at the date of the will, the testator may have contemplated future children coming into existence who might be legitimate and might satisfy the description in the gift (Dorin v. Dorin (1875), 7 H. L. 568; Durrant v. Friend (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 343; Dover v. Alexander (1843), 2 Hare, 275; Re Brown, Penrose v. Manning (1890), 63 L. T. 159, approved in Re Pearce, Alliance Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Francis, supra). The impossibility of legitimate children coming into existence where a woman is past child-bearing may be sufficient to include the illegitimate children in case of an immediate gift (Paul v. Children (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 16 (future gift to her child or children: existing illegitimate children not entitled); Re Eve, Edwards v. Burns, [1909] 1 Ch. 796 (immediate gift: existing illegitimate children held entitled)); and see Re Brown, Penrose v. Manning, supra, where the woman was fifty years of age, but her illegitimate children were excluded.

(e) Hill v. Crook (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 265, 283; Holt v. Sindrey (1868), L. R. 7 Eq. 170, as explained in Re Pearce, Alliance Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Francis, [1913] 2 Ch. 674, 687 (affirmed, [1914] 1 Ch. 254, C. A.); and see the cases cited in note (t), p. 737, post. As, for instance, where the testator uses a word in the plural number (such as "children"), when to his knowledge there is only a single legitimate person who could take under the gift, an illegitimate child may be included so as to render the description sensible (Gill v. Shelley (1833), 2 Russ. & M. 336; Leigh v. Byron (1853), 1 Sm. & G. 486; Tuquell v. Scott (1857), 24 Beav. 141; Re Embury, Bowyer v. Page, [1914] W. N. 220). But the use of a plural word is not sufficient to include illegitimate persons, if there are legitimate persons sufficient to satisfy the description in its ordinary sense, and there are no other indications of an intention to include illegitimate persons (Edmunds v. Fossey (1861), 29 Beav. 233), or if supposing them to be included the words of the will would still remain unsatisfied (Hart v. Durand (1816), 3 Anst. 684). The fact that the property is divided by the testator into a number of shares corresponding with the whole number of legitimate

The question of legitimacy (f) is in all such cases decided according to the law of the domicile of the person by reference to whom the relationship of the donees is described, whether the gift is a bequest of personalty (g), a specific devise of real estate (h), or a devise of land upon trust to sell and to apply the proceeds of sale as personalty (i).

SECT. 5.

of Donees.

1366. A common indication on the face of a will to include illegitimate relatives in a description is the fact that in other clauses of the will they, or other relatives of theirs, are referred to in terms showing that the testator treated the illegitimate claimants in question (k) as legitimate (l), particularly where it is shown or illegitimate claimants was considered not a sufficient indication in Cartwright v. Vawdrey (1800), 5 Ves. 530; Re Wells' Estate (1868), L. R. 3 Eq. 599. A gift in a modern will by an unmarried person to his or her own children must take effect, apart from revival after marriage (as to revocation of a will by marriage, see p. 562, ante; as to revival, see p. 575, ante), in favour of illegitimate children (Clifton v. Goodburn (1868), L. R. 3 Eq. 278).

(f) There is no rule that illegitimate children cannot in any circumstances participate with legitimate children in the benefit of a gift to children generally (Queen v. Bryant (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 697; Evans v. Davis (1849), 18 L. J. (Ch.) 180; Hill v. Crook (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 265; Ebber v. Fowler, [1909] 1 Ch. 578, C. A.; *Re Pearce, Alliance Assurance Co., Ltd. v. (k) Indications treating other illegitimate persons as legitimate are not sufficient (Mortimer v. West (1827), 3 Russ. 370; Re Wells' Estate (1868), L. R. 3 Eq. 599 (cases of particular children being mentioned and treated as "children"; no inference in favour of illegitimate child not expressly mentioned)), and may be the ground of an inference against the claimant (Kelly v. Hammond (1858), 26 Beav. 36).

(l) As, for instance, where the parents are spoken of in the will as husband and wife, or the illegitimate person is mentioned as "son," "daughter" or "child" of his or her natural parent, or is otherwise considered as having relatives which strictly in the legal sense could not exist in such a way as impliedly to include the illegitimate persons among the description in question (Hill v. Crook, supra, at p. 285; Meredith v. Farr (1843), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 525; Worts v. Cubitt (1854), 14 Beav. 421; Clifton v. Goodburn, supra; Savage v. Robertson (1868), L. Descriptions of Donees.

Gifts to illegitimate children of a man.

that the testator knew of the illegitimacy, and therefore could not be using his language in its ordinary sense (m); but this indication may be rebutted by a special and distinct provision for the illegitimate relatives, or other similar indications that the testator drew a distinction between them and the legitimate relatives (n).

1367. Where the gift is to the children of a man (o), or children of a man by a certain woman (p), and is such that in the circumstances existing illegitimate children are denoted, the gift is construed as referring to those who at the date of the will have acquired the reputation (q) of being the named man's children.

Future gifts.

1368. The rule of law forbidding gifts to future illegitimate children (r) may affect the way in which any such gift takes effect and in particular, in case of a gift expressly or by implication to all the illegitimate children of a person as a class, the class is restricted to those in esse or en ventre sa mère at the testator's death (s).

(1905), 92 L. T. 724; Re Corsellis, Freeborn v. Napper, [1906] 2 Ch. 310; but such indications were not considered conclusive in Bagley v. Mollard (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 581; Megson v. Hindle (1880), 15 Ch. D. 198, C. A., where, however, there were other indications, as to which see note (n), infra; Re Humphries, Smith v. Millidge (1883), 24 Ch. D. 691, per NORTH, J., at p. 696, where, however, a reference to "shares" of daughters was senseless unless the illegitimate child took; Re Hall Branston v. Weightman (1887), 35 Ch. D. 551 (description as "nephew" there not sufficient to include the person in a gift to the testator's sister's children); as to those cases, see Re Parker, Parker v. Osborne, [1897] Ch. 208, 213; Re Walker, Walker v. Lutyens, [1897] 2 Ch. 238, 252. It appears that there is no hard and fast rule of construction that the mere description of a person as a relative in a previous part of a will makes that person included in a general description of relatives in a later part of the will, but that in all such cases the context of the will and the evidence properly admissible must be considered (Re Cozens, Miles v. Wilson, [1903] 1 Ch. 138, 142, 143, following Re Jodrell, Jodrell v. Seale (1890), 44 Ch. D. 590, C. A., affirmed, sub nom. Seale-Hayne v. Jodrell, [1891] A. C. 304).

(m) As to the importance of showing what knowledge the testator had of the facts giving rise to the illegitimacy, see Re Herbert's Trusts, (1860) 1 John & H. 121, 124; Hill v. Crook (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 265, 277, 283; Re Horner, Eagleton v. Horner (1887), 37 Ch. D. 695, 707, commenting on Re Ayles' Trusts (1875), 1 Ch. D. 282. That his knowledge of the illegitimacy is not material where his words are sensible in their ordinary sense, see Godfrey v. Davis (1901), 6 Ves. 43, 48; Warner v. Warner (1850), 15 Jur. 141 per KNIGHT BRUCE, V.-C., at p. 142. The testator's ignorance of the illegitimacy and his belief that the parents of the illegitimate person were married may negative the inference that that person was intended to take (Re Pearce, Alliance Assurance Co. Ltd. v. Francis, [1914] 1 Ch. 254, 263 C. A.).

(p) Wilkinson v. Adam (1812), 1 Ves. & B. 422, affirmed (1823), 12 Price 470, H. L.; but this case has been considered to go to the extreme verge of the law; see Warner v. Warner, supra, at p. 142.

1369. A description by relationship primâ facie refers only to persons related by blood, including the half-blood (t), and in the exact relationship, if any, prescribed by the will (a), and not to persons related by affinity only (b). By the force of the context of the will (c) or the circumstances of the case (d) the description may be extended to include persons related only by affinity (e), or in the same or a different degree of distance in relationship (f). The

v. Fowler, [1909] 1 Ch. 578, C. A. (case of a settlement), overruling Re Shaw, Robinson v. Shaw, [1894] 2 Ch. 573.

(t) Grievess v. Rawley (1852), 10 Hare, 63 ("niece"); Re Hammersley, Kitchen v. Myers (1886), 2 T. L. R. 459; Re Cozens, Miles v. Wilson, [1903] 1 Ch. 138 ("my own nephews and nieces"). For a case of contrary intention, see Re Dowson, Dowson v. Beadle, [1909] W. N. 245 ("my own brothers and sisters"); Re Reed (1888), 57 L. J. (CH.) 790.

(a) Thus, where there are persons to satisfy the descriptions taken in their ordinary sense, and there is nothing in the will or the circumstances to give any other sense to the words, "grandchildren" do not include great-grandchildren (Orford (Lord) v. Churchill (1814), 3 Ves. & B. 59); or "first cousins" or "cousins" the descendants of first cousins (Sanderson v. Bayley (1838), 4 My. & Cr. 56; Stoddart v. Nelson, Stanger v. Nelson (1855), 6 De G. M. & G. 68; Stevenson v. Abingdon (1862), 10 W. R. 591; Burby v. Burby (1862), 9 Jur. (N. S.) 96; Copland's Executors v. Milnes, [1908] S. C. 426; the dictum giving a wide meaning to the word in Calderell v. Harrison (1840), 9 Sim. 457, 460, is overruled); or "second cousins" first cousins once removed (Bridgnorth Corporation v. Collins (1847), 15 Sim. 538, 541; Re Parker, Bentham v. Wilson (1881), 17 Ch. D. 262, C. A., where certain cases referred to in note (f), infra, are examined. So as to rule the description "nephews and nieces" does not include grandchildren (Campbell v. Bouskell (1859), 27 Beav. 325; M'Hugh v. M'Hugh, [1908] 1 I. R. 155, where the evidence showed that the real nephews and nieces were not the objects of bounty, and there was nothing to show who were those objects), or great nephews or nieces (Falkner v. Butler (1765), Amb. 514; Williamson v. Moore (1862), 8 Jur. (N. S.) 875; Re Blower's Trusts (1871), 6 Ch. App. 351; Shelley v. Bryer (1821), Jac. 207); and the description "nieces" does not include great nieces (Crook v. Whitley (1857), 7 De G. M. & G. 490). As to the meanings of "children," see p. 744, post.

(c) See the general rule, pp. 651, 652, ante.

(d) As to the principle relating to falsa demonstratio, see p. 685, ante.

(e) Frogley v. Phillips (1861), 3 Lve G. F. & J. 466; Re Gue, Smith v. Gue, [1892] W. N. 132, C. A. (wife of a nephew treated as a niece). Thus, relatives by affinity are held to take rather than the gift should fail, as, for instance, where the testator has no relatives by consanguinity of the described kind, and none can come into existence to satisfy the description (Hogg v. Cook (1863), 32 Beav. 641; Adney v. Greatrex (1869), 38 L. J. (CH.) 414; Sherratt v. Mountford (1873), 8 Ch. App. 928), or where it is shown that the testator treated the claimant as his own relative and did not know of the existence of the relative by consanguinity (Grant v. Grant (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 380, 727, Ex. Ch.; but certain dicta in this case as to the meaning of "nephew" were dissented from in Wells v. Wells (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 504, 506, and in Merrill v. Morton (1881), 17 Ch. D. 382, 386, and distinguished in Re Taylor, Cloak v. Hammond (1886), 34 Ch. D. 255, 257, 258, C. A.). "Cousin" may be understood in the circumstances to mean the wife of a cousin (Re Taylor, Cloak v. Hammond, supra).

(f) A gift to the testator's "first and second cousins" has in various contexts been held to include first cousins once or twice removed, and other relations not more remote in degree than second cousins (Mayo v. V.

SECT. 5.

mere fact that in a prior part of the will a person is described as a relative does not alone admit to a share in a subsequent gift to relatives of that degree either the named person, or other persons of like degree with him (g), but this fact is an indication in that direction (h) to be taken into consideration along with the context of the whole will and the circumstances of the case admissible in evidence (i).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Persons en ventre sa mère Treated as Born or Living.

Persons en ventre sa mère.

1370. In certain cases persons en ventre sa mère are treated as actually born (k). It has been adopted as a rule of construction for giving effect to a presumed intention (a), that in a gift of Mayott (1786), 2 Bro. C. C. 125 (great-niece also included); Silcox v. Bel (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 301; Charge v. Goodyer (1826), 3 Russ. 140; Wilks v. Bannister (1885), 30 Ch. D. 512). The term "second cousins" has been held to include first cousins once and twice removed, where no true second cousins existed (Re Bonner, Tucker v. Good (1881), 19 Ch. D. 201; Slad v. Fooks (1838), 9 Sim. 386); and see Bennett v. Marshall (1856), 2 K. & J. 740; see also Re Rickit's Trusts (1853), 11 Hare, 299 ("niece" held to mean "nephew"); Stringer v. Gardiner (1859), 4 De G. & J. 468, C. A. (gift to "my niece E. S.," who was dead, went to a great-great-niece of similar name); Weeds v. Bristol (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 333 ("nephews" included great-nephews). As to the meanings of "children," "issue" etc., see pp. 744 et seq., post.

(g) Thus, where a husband's niece or wife's niece is described as "my niece A.," she does not necessarily take under a subsequent gift to "my nephews and nieces" (Smith v. Lidiard (1857), 3 K. & J. 252; Wells v. Wells (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 504; Merrill v. Morton (1881), 17 Ch. D. 382 these cases, though criticised in Re Gue, Smith v. Gue, [1892] W. N. 88 132, C. A., and explained in Re Cozens, Miles v. Wilson, [1903] 1 Ch. 138 were followed in Re Green, Bath v. Cannon, [1914] 1 Ch. 134); or where a grand-nephew is described as "my nephew J.," he does not necessarily take under a gift to "my nephews and nieces" (Thompson v. Robinson (1859), 27 Beav. 486; and see Re Blower's Trusts (1871), 6 Ch. App. 351).

(h) Re Gue, Smith v. Gue, supra; Hussey v. Berkeley (1763), 2 Eden, 19 (a great granddaughter described as "my granddaughter"); James v. Smith (1844), 14 Sim. 214 ("my niece M. daughter of my nephew T.," admitted to share in gift to "my nephews and nieces").

(i) Re Cozens, Miles v. Wilson, supra, at pp. 142, 143 ("my own nephews and nieces" excluded nephews by affinity previously called "my nephew A." etc.).

(k) For many purposes, apart from construction of a will, this is the case as, for instance, for the purpose of taking under the Statutes of Distribution (Wallis v. Hodson (1740), 2 Atk. 114; see title DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, Vol. XI., p. 19); or of taking by descent, except that the intermediate rents pending birth descend to the heir (Bassel v. Basse (1744), 3 Atk. 203); or, under the law before the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26) (see p. 562, ante), of being in existence so as to cause revocation of a will (Doe d. Lancashire v. Lancashire (1792), 5 Term Rep 49; Villar v. Gilbey, [1907] A. C. 139, 148). So, such a person might "be vouched in a recovery though it is for the purpose of making him answer over in value. He may be an executor. . . . He may have an injunction and he may have a guardian" (Thellusson v. Woodford (1799), 4 Ves. 227, per BULLER, J., at p. 322 (affirmed (1805), 11 Ves. 112, H. L.); 1 Bl. Com., 4th ed., pp. 129, 130). As to his capacity to take by devise, see p. 537, ante, as to his capacity of being a life in being for the purpose of the rule against perpetuities, see title PERPETUITIES, Vol. XXII., pp. 302, 303.

(a) Clarke v. Blake (1789), 2 Bro. C. C. 319, per Lord THURLOW, L.C., at condition referring to persons, of a named relationship to the testator or other propositus, who are born at or living at a particular time (b), the description includes a person who is then en ventre sa mère and is afterwards born alive (c), and would have come under the description if he had been then actually born or living, provided that this construction is for the benefit of such unborn person (d), and that there is no context in the will indicating a contrary intention (e). The rule is commonly stated with respect to gifts to

p. 320; Trower v. Butts (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 181, per LEACH, V.-C., at p. 184.

(b) The qualification "born at", or "living at" the particular time may be expressly made by the words of the will, or impliedly made under the rules for the ascertainment of the class; thus, the rule applies where the gift is to "children" simply, where the class is ascertained during the gestation of the unborn person (Northey v. Strange (1716), 1 P. Wms. 340, 342; compare Storrs v. Benbow (1833), 2 My. & K. 46, reversed on appeal (1853), 7 De G. M. & G. 390, where the gift was "to each child that may be born" to certain persons; Mogg v. Mogg (1815), 1 Mer. 655; Re Hallett, Hallett v. Hallett, [1892] W. N. 148).

(c) See the discussion on this qualification in Re Wilmer's Trusts, Moore v. Winkfield, [1903] 1 Ch. 874, per BUCKLEY, J., at pp. 879 et seq. In Doe d. Clarke v. Clarke (1795), 2 Hy. Bl. 399, EYRE, C.J., said that independently of intention a child en ventre sa mère was "living," and this was followed in Re Burrows, Cleghorn v. Burrows, [1895] 2 Ch. 497; this is not, however, the general opinion; see Trower v. Butts, supra.

(d) Villar v. Gilbey, [1907] A. C. 139 (where the rule was not applied to a condition cutting down the interest of a tenant in tail to a life estate), approving the dicta and decisions in Trower v. Butts, supra; Blasson v. Blasson (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 665 (where the words in question were used for the purpose only of ascertaining a period of time); Fearce v. Carrington (1873), 8 Ch. App. 969 (where the benefit was that the divesting of the unborn person's interest under another clause was prevented); Digest, lib. 1, tit. 5, s. 7: "quoties de commodis ipsius partus queritur," cited in Blasson v. Blasson, supra, per Lord WESTBURY, L.C., who said, ibid., at p. 670, that the rule applied only for the purpose of enabling the unborn child to take a benefit which, if born, it would be entitled to. In Re Burrows, Cleghorn v. Burrows, supra (if and in so far as that case is not inconsistent with Villar v. Gilbey, supra), the benefit was that the divesting of the mother's interest was prevented; but the words in question were "in case she has no issue then living."

(e) Villar v. Gilbey, [1906] 1 Ch. 583, C.A., per COZENS-HARDY, L.J., at p. 595. The early equity decisions are not easily reconcilable; according to BULLER, J., in Doe d. Clarke v. Clarke, supra, at p. 401, there were two classes of cases: the first where the gift was in the nature of a portion or provision for children, and there an after-born child took his share with the rest (see Millar v. Turner (1748), 1 Ves. Sen. 85); the second, where the gift arose from some motives of personal affection, and there it was confined to children actually in existence (see Cooper v. Forbes (1786), 2 Bro. C. C. 63, where Lord KENYON, M.R., following Ellison v. Airey (1748), 1 Ves. Sen. 111, and Pierson v. Garnet (1786), 2 Bro. C. C. 38, held that a child en ventre sa mère could not take under a bequest to the children of A. living at the testator's death; see also Freemanile v. Freemanile (1786), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 248, also a decision of Lord KENYON; Mudgrave v. Parry (1715), 2 Vern. 710). In Doe d. Clarke v. Clarke, supra, EYRE, C.J., said, at p. 401, that the cases in equity proceeded on a distinction which appeared to him extremely unsatisfactory and unfit to be the ground of any decision whatever, and the view generally held is that the above decisions of Lord KENYON are now overruled by Doe d. Clarke v. Clarke, supra. The distinction drawn, however, may be a real one where the context of the will, as applied to the circumstances, shows that the testator by the description in the will meant to describe persons actually known to him (see Millar v.

children (f), but applies to other descriptions of relatives of the propositus (g), and to descriptions of persons in conditions as well as in gifts (h). In order, however, to be capable of taking under this rule, the person must be capable of having been legitimately begotten before the period of distribution (i).

The proviso that the rule is only applied where it is for the benefit of the unborn person admits of an exception in certain cases where there is a question of applying the rule against perpetuities (k). Moreover, in the case of a limitation of real estate to a person and his children, where that person has a child en ventre sa mère but has had no other child at the death of the testator, that child does not take concurrently with the parent (l), and the usual rule of construction in similar cases where children are alive is not applied (m).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Enumeration of the Donees

Enumeration different from actual number.

1371. The testator's enumeration of donees is sometimes incon-

In Williams v. Ocean Coal Co., Id., [1907] 2 K. B. 422, 429, 432, C. A., the court applied the rule to a child as being a "person . . . dependent," in construing the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7 (2); and in The George and Richard (1871), L. R. 3 A. & E. 466, 480, it was applied to a child in the construction of "family" in the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93). In Bennett v. Honeywood (1772), Amb. 708, 712, the court declined to extend the rule to a gift to "relations by consanguinity," but the ratio decidendi, that the rule only applied to the case of a devise to children, is contrary to the authorities; see the passages cited from the civil law relating both to lineal and collateral relatives in Wallis v. Hodson (1740), 2 Atk. 114, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 118.

Descriptions of Donees.

sistent with the number of persons satisfying the description (n). Where there is a gift to a number of persons designated by a class or group description, with a statement of the number of the donees, which is either greater or less (o) than the actual number of persons who fit the description at the death of the testator—as in the case of a gift to the four children of A., who at the death of the testator is shown to have five children—then unless it appears that all the persons so designated were intended to take, independently of their number (p), the court considers (q) with how many of such persons the testator was acquainted at the date of his will, and if the number corresponds with the number in the will, may thus be able to identify the particular persons described (r).

1372. There are cases, however, where the court can arrive at the conclusion that all the persons satisfying a particular description are intended to be benefited, and if there has been an inaccurate enumeration of the persons composing the class, the court rejects the enumeration (s). Thus, if it appears that at the date of the will the fact was, and the testator knew, that the number of persons who then answered the description was greater or less than the number shown by the will (t), or if the number could not then, in fact and to the knowledge of the testator, be ascertained (a), or if (in cases where the gift would otherwise be void for uncertainty) there is no evidence at all of the testator's

begotten."

1373. A description of children or issue as "begotten" primâ facie includes children or issue to be begotten in the future, and a description of children or issue as "to be begotten" primâ facie includes children or issue already begotten (c); but by the context of the will these technical meanings may be displaced and the strictly grammatical meaning substituted in each case (d).

"Children."

1374. The description "children" of a named person (e) in its ordinary sense (f) refers to the first generation only of legitimate (g) descendants, by any marriage (h), and does not include any grandchildren (i) or remoter descendants (k); but it may be extended by the context and the circumstances of the case admissible in evidence (l) to such other generations of descendants (m), to the

(f) See the general rule, p. 655, ante.

(h) Even though a second marriage is not in the contemplation of the testator (Brathwaite v. Brathwaite (1685), 1 Vern. 334; Champion v. Pickax (1737), 1 Atk. 472; Barrington v. Tristram (1801), 6 Ves. 345; Ex parte Ilchester (Earl) (1803), 7 Ves. 348, 380; Critchett v. Taynton (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 541; and see Nash v. Allen (1889), 42 Ch. D. 54, 59). A reference to a present or future husband did not exclude a deceased husband's children in Pasmore v. Huggins (1855), 21 Beav. 103; Re Pickup's Trusts (1861), 1 John. & H. 389. The contexts in Slavers v. Barnard (1843), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 539 (certain children of a prior marriage specially named); Stopforth v. Chaworth (1845), 8 Beav. 331; *Lovejoy v. R. 587 ("our children" in will in favour of second wife), excluded the children of the prior marriage.

(i) Reeves v. Brymer (1799), 4 Ves. 692, 698 ("children may mean grandchildren where there can be no other construction, but not otherwise"); Rodcliffe v. Buckley (1804), 10 Ves. 195; Slavers v. Barnard, supra, at p. 540; Thellusson v. Woodford (1829), 5 Russ. 100, 106; Loring v. Thomas (1861), 1 Drew. & Sm. 497, 508.

(k) Pride v. Fooks (1858), 3 De G. & J. 252, 275, C. A.

(l) As to evidence, see, generally, pp. 637 et seq., ante.

(m) Thus, "children" may be construed "grandchildren" where the context shows that the testator has used the word in an extended sense whole line capable of inheriting from the named person (n), or to illegitimate children (o), stepchildren (p), or adopted children (q). The meaning of a gift to "the children of A. and B.," where A. and B. are two named persons, depends on the context and circumstances of each case (r). It appears that primâ facie the children of A. and the children of B. are held to be designated where both classes of children exist (a), and that they all take per capita (b); but,

(Royle v. Hamilton (1799), 4 Ves. 437; Radcliffe v. Buckley (1804), 10 Ves. 195, 201; Re Crawhall's Trusts (1856), 8 De G. M. & G. 480, 487; Re Blackman (1852), 16 Beav. 377 (name added)), or where the circumstances admissible in evidence give rise to a similar inference, for example, in a case of a legacy to the children of a deceased person, where at the date of the will there are, to the knowledge of the testator, no children, but only grandchildren alive, on the principle ut res magis valeat quam pereat (Re Smith, Lord v. Hayward (1887), 35 Ch. D. 558, per KAY, J., at p. 559 (there meaning "off-spring")); Fenn v. Death (1856), 23 Beav. 73; Berry v. Berry (1861), 3 Giff. 134; and see Crook (or Crooke) v. Brooking (1689), 2 Vern. 50, 107, 108; Gale v. Bennet (1768), Amb. 681, explained in Pride v. Fooks (1858), 3 De G. & J. 252, 275-279, C. A.). In Re Kirk, Nicholson v. Kirk (1885), 52 L. T. 346, however, the court adhered to the literal construction in a similar case; the meaning "grandchildren" cannot, it appears, be given where the parent of the children is alive (Hawkins, Wills, 1st ed., 85, citing Moor v. Ruisebeck (1841), 12 Sim. 123, where, however, the context only was relied upon), or where the context of the will draws a distinction between children and grandchildren (Loring v. Thomas (1861), 1 Drew. & Sm. 497, 509); and there would be more difficulty in giving the word that meaning in case of a gift to the children of several persons, some of whom had children but others grandchildren only, since the court would be disinclined to give different meanings to the same word (Radcliffe v. Buckley, supra; Re Smith, Lord v. Hayward, supra, per KAY, J., at p. 599). As to whether, if there are no children, but grandchildren and great-grandchildren, the grandchildren may take to the exclusion of great-grandchildren, see Fenn v. Death, supra, where it was so held; Pride v. Fooks, supra, per TURNER, L.J., at pp. 275-279: "I can see no ground on which the limitation, if it extends beyond the children, can be confined to the grandchildren, or on which the great-grandchildren can be excluded."

(n) As, for instance, in direct gifts (Bowen v. Lewis (1884), 9 App. Cas. 890) and in gifts over (Doe d. Smith v. Webber (1818), 1 B. & Ald. 713; Re Synge's Trusts (1854), 3 I. Ch. R. 379). As to "children" as a word of limitation, see p. 766, post; as to limitations to a person and his children, see p. 787, post.

(o) See pp. 735 et seq., ante.

A., considered that the grammatical construction had been settled by authority (namely Lugar v. Harman (1786), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 250, and the dicta in Doe d. Hayer v. Joinville (1802), 3 East, 172) as meaning "B. and the children of A."

for example, the fact that either A. or B. had no children (c), or that A. was dead and B. alive at the date of the will (d) or at the date contemplated by the gift (e), or that A. and B. were relatives of the testator of the same degree (f), may affect the construction of the gift (g).

1375. "Descendants" ordinarily refers to children, grandchildren and other issue (h), of every degree of remoteness (i) in descent; although the word may be confined to mean children on a sufficiently strong context (k), the court does not restrict the word to that sense merely because the testator speaks of the descendants taking their parents' share (l). The class of descendants taking under a gift are ascertained according to the ordinary rules for ascertaining a class (m). The descendants, when ascertained, primâ facie take per capita and not per stirpes (n); but in a gift to a group of persons or their descendants, the latter primâ facie take by way of substitution only, and not in competition with their parents, if living at the time of distribution (o).

(d) In such a case B. takes (Lugar v. Harman (1786), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 250, where it was considered that "of" should have been prefixed to "B." if his children had been intended; but see Mason v. Baker (1856), 2 K. & J. 567, per Wood, V.-C., at p. 570; and compare Hawes v. Hawes (1880), 14 Ch. D. 614).

1376. The word "family," in different circumstances (p), may mean a man's household consisting of himself, his wife, children, and servants (q); or his wife and children (r); or his children excluding his wife (s); or in the absence of wife and children his brothers and sisters (s); or his next of kin (t); or his genealogical stock (u). The word may include any relative whatever, where used to denote the objects of a power of appointment (a), or descendants of every degree (b).

to his children (e), who primâ facie take as joint tenants (f), or if there are no children, to all such persons as would in the case of intestacy be entitled to take his personal estate under the Statutes of Distribution (g).

In a gift of a mixed fund of realty and personalty the word may be used to denote persons entitled by legal succession according to the nature of the property, and to mean the heir as regards the real estate and the next of kin as regards the personal estate (h). Where the family is defined merely by a surname, the court may ascertain from the circumstances of the case what family of that surname was best known to the testator, and the persons to take may be determined accordingly (i).

Where none of the above meanings can be given consistently with the will, the gift may be void for uncertainty (k).

sense where the provision made by the will is for portions for younger children, and the eldest son is excluded, "younger children" in such a case being primâ facie taken to mean children other than a child taking the estate (q). It is possible that an eldest son may take under a limitation to "second and other sons (r)," but not where by the context of the will he is excluded (s).

1378. In a gift to the "heir" or "heirs" of any person, the description in its technical meaning includes the whole line of succession of persons capable of inheriting from him (t); it may, however, designate some particular person or persons, satisfying that description at some particular time (u), and, in a gift to "the heir of the body" or "heirs of the body" of any person the words have similar meanings (w).

In cases of a direct gift to the heir, where the ancestor is living, since no one can be the heir of a living person, the technical meaning may be displaced, and the person who is heir presumptive may be designated (x). Otherwise the heir is primâ facie ascertained at the death of the ancestor, whether the latter is the testator or any other person, and whether the gift is immediate or future (a).

The word "heir" primâ facie refers to descent at common law, and even in a case where copyhold, gavelkind, or borough-English lands are given to the heir of the testator, the common law heir, according to the general course of descent, is primâ facie entitled (b).

1379. A devise to heirs of a particular character (c), not referring merely to the descent of an estate tail (d), takes effect only in favour of the heirs general, conditionally on their possessing that character, unless the intention of the testator is shown to the contrary (e). If the devise is to the "heirs male of the body" of any person, and the words are used as words of description and not of limitation (f), then the heir male of the body, who need not be heir general (g), primâ facie takes under the gift; but where, in a devise to "heirs male" or "next heir male" of the testator, it appears that the testator could not have meant the heirs male of his own body, primâ facie only the heir general of the testator, being a male, can take under the gift (h).

sufficient context, as in cases where the heirs are to take by substitution for the ancestor, the word may be understood to mean such person or persons as would legally succeed to the property according to its nature and quality (k); and in the same gift, therefore, it may have two meanings, heir-at-law as to the real estate, and the persons entitled by statute as on intestacy as to the personal estate comprised in the gift (l). In a gift of personal estate alone "heirs" has been construed as meaning either next of kin (m), the widow taking her share (n), or executors and administrators (o). The context may, however, give other meanings to the word (p).

1381. A gift to a named person "or his heirs" is prima facie substitutional, at all events in gifts of personal estate (q), so that if the first donee does not take, the bequest takes effect in favour of his next of kin according to the Statutes of Distribution (r); but in a direct gift of personal estate to "the heir" of a named person, the words are primâ facie descriptive and not substitutional, and the gift takes effect in favour of the person who is the named person's heir (s).

1382. The word "issue," in its usual legal sense, includes descendants of every degree (t). In a devise of real estate to a person "and his issue," especially where at the date of the will he has no issue (u), the word is primâ facie a word of limitation (w), and the gift creates an estate tail in the devisee (a). The word is then equivalent to "heirs of the body" (b). Similarly, in a series of limitations by will of real estate, where after a particular estate in any person a remainder is limited to his "issue," the word is primâ facie a word of limitation (c), and the rule in Shelley's Case applies (d). In both these cases the context of the will may show that the word is one of description and not of limitation. The word is of flexible meaning (e).

In the case of direct gifts to issue (f) as purchasers the word may mean lineal descendants, as is ordinarily its meaning, or children or some particular class of descendants ascertained by reference to some particular time or event (g). The meaning is not

(o) This rule is known as the rule in Sibley v. Perry (1802), 7 Ves. 522, in which case, however, as explained by JAMES, L.J., in Ralph v. Carrick (1879), 11 Ch. D. 873, C. A., at p. 882, Lord ELDON, L.C., did not intend to lay down any general rule or canon of construction, but was dealing only with the peculiar language of a particular will, and the case is therefore an example of the inference under the second example given in the text, supra. The rule is settled, however, by Pruett v. Osborne (1840), 11 Sim. 132; Pope v. Pope (1851), 14 Beav. 591; Bradshaw v. Melling (1853), 19 Beav. 417; *Parsons v. example, where the gift to the issue is contained in a direction that they shall take the share their parent would have taken if living at the time of distribution, and the reference to the parent is construed as a reference to the first taker. This canon of construction, however, may be controlled by the general effect and scope of the whole will, for example, by the use of the word "issue" in other parts of the will, which may enlarge this construction and restore the word to its original comprehensive meaning (p); thus, the court is disinclined to apply this rule where there is a gift over on general failure of the issue (q), or where the result of the application of the rule would in certain events be an entire or partial intestacy (r).

1386. "Offspring" similarly extends primâ facie to any degree of lineal descendants (i), but may be restricted or varied in meaning (k).

1387. Under a gift to the next of kin (l) of any person (m), simply and without reference to either intestacy or the Statutes of Distribution (n), the donees are considered to be the nearest kindred in blood (o), including the half blood (p), and not to be the statutory next of kin; and such persons primâ facie take as joint tenants. If the will describes the donees by reference to those statutes, either expressly or impliedly (as in the case of a reference to intestacy), the property passes to the statutory next of kin (q). Newton* (1877), 45 L. J. (CH.) 268 (legal or next of kin). Description of Donees.Ascertain-

1388. Whatever may be the time of distribution, where there is a gift to a testator's next of kin, without more, the class primâ facie has to be ascertained (u) at the testator's death (w), and where there is a gift to the next of kin of any other person, the class primâ facie has to be ascertained at that person's death if he survived the testator (x), and if not at the testator's death (a). In a gift to a class of next of kin of the testator, or his nearest relatives, or similar class, living at a future period of distribution, the entire class is ascertained at the testator's death, but those only of the class take who survive the period of distribution (b).

Ascertain-
ment of class

reference to Statutes.

Where the gift is to the testator's next of kin entitled by virtue of the Statutes of Distribution, even though they are to be so entitled at some future time (c), the class is primâ facie ascertained at the testator's death (d); the context, however, may require them to be ascertained as if the testator had died at some other period (e).

On the other hand, where the donees are the persons who by virtue of the statute would be entitled to the testator's estate, the widow is included (Martin v. Glover (1844), 1 Coll. 269; Jenkins v. Gower (1846), 2 Coll. 537).

(c) See Re Winn, Brook v. Whitton, supra, where PARKER, J., at p. 289, explained that in such cases the ordinary rule which would have ascertained the class at the time referred to is rebutted, because of the necessity for every person who claims under the gift to prove his title by virtue of the statute.

1389. In the case of a gift to next of kin under or according to the Statutes of Distribution, they take as tenants in common in the shares fixed by the statute in cases where either the will in terms refers to the statutory mode of distribution (f), or is silent on the subject (g); but if, for example, the testator directs that they are to take equally, effect must be given to such direction (h).

Where the gift is to next of kin, excluding certain persons, the next of kin are ascertained as if these persons were dead at the time in question, but without any other difference from the above rule (i).

1390. The mere description of a donee as the holder of an office is not of itself sufficient to raise the inference that the gift is for the benefit of the office and not of the holder personally (k), unless the context and circumstances show that the holder for the time being was intended (l); but a gift to a person either described as, or known to the testator as, the holder of an office, "or his successors," or a gift to the holder of an office for the time being, is for the benefit of the office or of the association or body in which the office is held (m).

1391. The primary sense of the word "relations" (n) extends to relations of every degree of relationship (o), however remote, and where donees are thus described this effect is given to the word wherever it is possible (p), as in cases where the gift is a power of selection and appointment among relations (q), or is to poor relations by way of perpetual charity (r). meaning cannot be given to the word in a direct gift to relations, or in a gift to them under a non-exclusive power of distribution, on account of the uncertainty (s) in the number of persons designated (t); and therefore the court in such a case presumes that the testator intended his next of kin according to the Statutes of Distribution (u).

The class of relations is as a rule ascertained as if they were described as next of kin (a), and they primâ facie take per capita (b) and as joint tenants (c).

1392. In a bequest of personal estate to the "representatives" of any person, whether simply or with the added qualification of "legal" or "personal" or "legal personal," the description is taken in its ordinary sense and primâ facie designates the executors or administrators of that person (d). The mere appointment of executors, or references to executors and administrators may, but will not necessarily, give a different sense to the words (*Re Ware, Cumberlege v. may show that the description means descendants (f), or next of kin, according to the Statutes of Distribution (g), as in cases where directions are added showing that a division among them is intended (h), or where the gift is to the person or his representatives immediately on the death of the testator (i), and not after a life estate (k), or otherwise where it is shown that the donees were to take beneficially and not in any fiduciary capacity (l).

1393. Gifts to the "servants" of the testator or other donees described by their employment (m) and not by name, to take as individuals, prima facie refer to persons filling the character at the date of the will, and do not import that the employment and character must continue to the death of the testator (n). It may appear, however, that the donees are regarded as a class to be ascertained in accordance with the ordinary rules (o), and generally the context of the will may show that persons filling the character at the date of the will (p), or at the death of the testator (q), or at any other time (r), are designated.

The character of servants admitted to benefit must depend on the context and the circumstances (s). Thus, "servants living with me at the time of my death" or "servants in my service at the time of my death" are not confined to persons actually living in the same house with the testator, but, in the ordinary sense of the words, include persons who are wholly in his service and not free to serve others (t). In the case of such a gift a servant who before the testator's death leaves his service, either voluntarily (u) or even on a wrongful dismissal (a), is not entitled to share, though a temporary absence while the relationship of service continues is immaterial (b).

 to servants.

"Domestic" or "household" servants are as a rule restricted to indoor servants (c).

1394. Where a testator gives to his servants, generally, one or more years' wages, he prima facie is understood to mean that the gift is intended for servants whom he has hired at yearly wages; the nature of the gift explains the persons for whom it is intended (d). The mere fact of splitting up a year's remuneration into weekly payments does not, however, exclude a servant from such a legacy (e); and this presumption has no operation where the context of the will

(s) In Sleech v. Thorington (1754), 2 Ves. Sen. 560, 564, a gift to "the two servants that shall live with me at the time of my death" was held to include a third taken into service afterwards, the enumeration being rejected (see pp. 742, 743, ante). An annuity to a servant so long as she continues in the service of a person, who, in fact, predeceases the testator, may take effect as a life annuity (Burchett v. Woodward (1823), Turn. & R. 442).

shows that the reference to the year is introduced merely to fix the amount of the legacy (f).

"Wife."

1395. Where the donee is described as the wife of a person, and that person is married at the date of the will, then, in the absence of a context to the contrary, the wife existing at the date of the will is primâ facie intended to take, and not any subsequent wife (g); the fact that the interest conferred is only during widowhood, after a life estate to the husband (h), or that it is expressed to be given for the support of the wife and her husband and his children (i), does not of itself show any contrary intention. If the context shows that intention, or according to the circumstances, the description of "wife" may include a subsequent wife (k), a person not married to the testator or other person whose wife she is said to be (l), or an affianced wife (m).

Similar rules apply to the description "husband" (n).

"Husband."

1396. If the gift is to the wife, who is accurately so described, expressly "during widowhood," the latter words form a condition as to the beginning and ending of her interest, so that the effect of a subsequent divorce before the gift takes effect is that she is disentitled to the gift, as she does not then become a widow (o); if she is not accurately so described, the words may be read "until death or remarriage" (p).

SECT. 6.—Quantity of Interest Given.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

No presumption as to quantity of interest.

1397. A testator gives arbitrarily such estate as he thinks fit, consistently with law, and, apart from the construction of the words of the whole will, there is no presumption that he means one quantity of interest rather than another; the subject being mere bounty, the intended extent of that bounty can be known only from the words in which it is given, construed according to the ordinary general rules (q).

Absolute interest cut down.

Thus, an interest apparently an estate of inheritance in real estate (r) or an absolute interest in personal estate may on the context of the whole will be cut down to a life interest (s), or made subject to defeasance (t); or a life interest may be extended to an absolute interest (u), or may be reduced by the context to an estate until remarriage or other event (w).

Clear gift not cut down.

It is a settled rule of construction that if there is a clear gift it is not to be cut down by anything subsequent in the will which does not with reasonable certainty indicate the intention of the testator to cut it down (x). This rule does not mean, however, that the court

A mere gift over on the death of the donee in any contingent circumstances is not as a rule such a context (Watkins v. Weston (1863) 3 De G. J. & Sm. 434; Re Bourke's Trusts (1891), 27 L. R. Ir. 573; Parnel v. Boyd, [1896] 2 I. R. 571; and see Re Monck (Lady), Monck v. Croker [1900] 1 I. R. 56).

is to institute a comparison between the two clauses in question as to lucidity (b). Thus, where personal estate is given in terms which confer an absolute estate to a named donee, and then further interests are given merely after or on the termination of that donee's interest, and not in defeasance of it, his absolute interest is not cut down and the further interests fail (c).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Presumption in Favour of the Donee.

1398. If an intention of bounty towards a particular donee is apparent on the face of the will, but the will is ambiguous as to the manner in which the gift is to take effect with regard to the property given or the interest created therein, the court leans to that construction of the gift which is most favourable to the donee (d)

Roberts*, [1903] 2 Ch. 200, 204; Re Freeman, Hope v. Freeman, [1910] 1 Ch. 681, 691, C. A. The principle applies not only where the question is one of the revocation of the legacy, but as between one donee and another person claiming to be donee under the same will (Re Freeman, Hope v. Freeman, supra, at p. 687). As to the cases of failure of a direction to settle, where there is an absolute gift in the first instance, see p. 674, ante.

(b) Randfield v. Randfield, supra, per Lord CAMPBELL, at p. 235. The rule, however, has frequently been stated as requiring the subsequent clause to be "equally" clear with the first; for example, as meaning that words which cut down a gift clearly given should be as clear as the words which confer it; see Doc d. Hearle v. Hicks (1831), 8 Bing. 475, H. L.; Kiver v. Oldfield (1859), 4 De G. & J. 30, 37; Leslie v. Rothen (Earl), [1894] 2 Ch. 499, 516, C. A.

(c) Hoare v. Byng (1844), 10 Cl. & Fin. 508, H. L. (to B. "and afterwards" to others); Re Percy, Percy v. Percy (1883), 24 Ch. D. 616 ("afterwards"), followed in Hyndman v. Hyndman, [1895] 1 I. R. 179 ("at their death"). It is otherwise where the interests are such that the interests other than the last can be treated as successive life interests (Lonsdale (Earl) v. Bercholdt (Countess) (1854), Kay. 646 ("remainder to B., remainder to C.")). As to gifts with power of disposal, see p. 770, post.

(d) Bac. Abr., tit. Wills and Testaments (G) (7th ed., p. 483). "Being a grant, a devise must be taken most strongly against the grantor" (Cooper v. Woolfitt (1857), 2 H. & N. 122, per POLLOCK, C.B., at p. 125). As to the similar rule in case of deeds, see title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., pp. 440, 441. As to rights of selection given to the donee, see p. 531, ante. As to a devise of an option of purchase of the testator's land at a fixed price, see p. 529, ante. "When any specific thing is given it must be in general understood that the devisee is meant to take it in its integrity," and without derogation (Conron v. Conron (1858), 7 H. L. Cas. 168, 186, 190); the presumption is "against an intention to charge land specifically devised, and a contrary intention is not shown by a mere charge on all the testator's land" (Spong v. Spong (1829), 1 Dow & Cl. 365, H. L.), but may be shown by a sufficient context (Bank of Ireland v. McCarthy, [1898] A. C. 181, 185). Similarly, in the case of a devise of specific real estate forming part of the assets of the testator's partnership, the devisee prima facie takes free from the liability to contribute to the partnership debts as between the beneficiaries claiming under the will in a case where the other partnership property is more than enough to clear the partnership debts (Re Holland, Brettell v. Holland, [1907] 2 Ch. 88); but this does not affect the adjustment of rights as between the partners themselves, even where the surviving partner is the devisee (Farquhar v. Hadden (1871), 7 Ch. App. 1). Again, where a doubt arises upon what property a charge of debts is to operate, the court inclines to a construction which gives the SECT. 6. in the absence of all other means of ascertaining the intention (e).

Quantity of Interest Given.

What are words of limitation.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Gifts with Words of Limitation.

1399. The question whether words are words of limitation or no is equivalent to the question whether they were used by the testator for the purpose of describing the quantity of interest which the testator intended the donee to take (f). The technical words of limitation, which are necessary in some instruments (g), are no necessary in a will (h) for creating either legal estates of inheritance in real estate or equitable interests therein (i).

Devise to a person "and his heirs."

1400. Although a devise to a person and his heirs usually gives a fee simple, the context may show that by "heirs" was meant "heir of the body" (k), so that an estate tail only is created. For example, a devise over on the donee's death without heirs of his body (l) or without issue indefinitely (m) has the effect of cutting down the fee simple to an estate tail. A devise over on default of "heirs" has this effect if the devisee over is the right heir of the creditors a charge on the larger amount of property (Noel v. Weston (1813) 2 Ves. & B. 269, 274; and compare Re Fitzgerald's Settlement, Fitzgerald v. White (1887), 37 Ch. D. 18 (trust in a settlement for paying mortgagees out of accumulations of rents)). As to cases where a particular motive or mode of benefit to the donee, is expressed, see p. 777, post. It has been suggested that the rule of construction in favour of the donee may be especially applicable in cases of wills made for valuable consideration (Underhill and Strahan, Interpretation of Wills and Settlements, 2nd ed. pp. 60, 51).

(e) There is thus no room for the application of the rule where the ordinary principles of construction as to giving effect to every word (Patching v. Dubbins (1853), Kay, 1, per WOOD, V.-C., at pp. 13, 14), and as to giving their ordinary meaning to the words (Taylor v. St. Helen's Corporation (1877), 6 Ch. D. 264, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 270), sufficiently indicate the intention; see pp. 655 et seq., ante.

lawfully begotten" (x), creates an estate in fee tail special (male or female) or general, respectively, in the devisee.

1401. Many words descriptive of descendants are capable in a will of being words of limitation in respect of both real and personal estate. The words "first and every other son" or "children" may be taken as words of limitation where it is necessary to give them that construction in order to effectuate the intention of the testator (x), though ordinarily speaking they are words of purchase (a); and similarly in the case of the words "son," "eldest

It is otherwise in a non-testamentary instrument (Dormer's Case (Abraham v. Twigg) (1596), Moore (K. B.), 424, cited in Beresford's Case, supra, at p. 41 b). In a devise to A. and his "lawful heirs," the word "lawful," primâ facie, does not restrict the sense of the words (Mathews v. Gardiner (1853), 17 Beav. 254, 257; and see Simpson v. Ashworth (1843), 6 Beav. 412, 416).

(x) Thus, such a gift may be explained by a subsequent gift over on default of issue generally (Wight v. Leigh (1809), 15 Ves. 564; Herbert v. Blunden (1837), 1 Dr. & Wal. 78; Re Childe, [1883] W. N. 48, explained in Re Pennefather, Savile v. Savile, [1896] 1 L. Lewis* (1738), 1 Atk. 432, 434; Robinson v. Hicks (1758), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 180 (without such issue); Doe d. Jones v. Davies (1832), 4 B. & Ad. 43; Lewis v. Puxley (1847), 16 M. & W. 733). Accordingly, a limitation to a father for life, and after his death to his "children," where on the construction of the will in question this word is a collective name for all the line of descent, creates an estate tail in the father (Anon. (1563), 1 And. 43; Hodges v. Middleton (1780), 2 Doug. (K. B.) 431, which case, however, is said (*Broadhurst v. Rep. 93 b, see THE REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTLES REAL, Vol. XXIV., pp. 226 et seq.). It appears, however, that, except in certain cases (see pp. 787 et seq., post), the authorities do not lay down any canon of construction to guide the court as to when such words are words of limitation (East v. Twyford (1851), 9 Hare, 713, per TURNER, V.-C., at p. 730, affirmed (1853), 4 H. L. Cas. 517); in all these cases the intention of the testator as gathered from the whole will must fix the meaning (Mandeville v. Carrick (1795), 3 Ridg. Parl. Cas. 352, 365).

(a) Doe d. Phipps v. Mulgrave (Lord) (1793), 5 Term Rep. 320, per Lord KENYON, C.J., at p. 323, adopted in Tyrone (Earl) v. Waterford (Marquis) (1869), 1 De G. son" (b), "eldest male issue" (c), or "family" (d). The words "issue" (e), "descendants" (f), and "posterity" (g) are more easily susceptible of such a meaning. In the case of such words, where they include not only persons who are heirs by lineal descent, but persons who can only be collateral heirs, the estate is a fee simple; where they only comprise persons who are heirs by lineal descent, the estate is an estate tail (h), the stock of descent being chosen so as to include all the members of the family intended to take (i).

A word (such as the words "issue" or "heirs of the body") capable of describing at once a donee and persons taking an estate tail by way of inheritance, if the context requires it (j), may be at one and the same time a word of description, pointing out who is to be the first taker, and a word of limitation, prescribing what estate such first taker is to have; the gift is construed in such cases as creating such an estate in the first taker as will descend if allowed to do so to the whole series of persons who successively answer the description (k).

 inheritable gifts of personal estate.

1403. A disposition by will of personal estate by words which in the opinion of the court show an intention to give an inheritable estate in it to a donee gives him an absolute interest (l). Thus, where the words are used in their usual sense (m), a donee takes an absolute interest under a bequest of personal estate to him and his heirs (n), or to him and the heirs of his body (o), or to him and the heirs male of his body (p), or under other expressions showing an intention that his issue throughout the whole of their line should take after him by descent (q). The intention may be inferred by implication from a gift over on failure of his heirs of the body or

26 New Zealand Law Reports, 145; Moore v. Simkin (1885), 31 Ch. D. 95 (limitation to "heirs" general, so as to create fee simple: rule in Mandeville's Case (1328), Y. B. 2 Edw. 3, 1, held inapplicable).

(l) The rule is often stated in the form "words which create an estate tail in realty will give an absolute interest in personalty"; see Tolhill v. Pitt (1766), 1 Madd. 488, per SEWELL, M.R., at p. 509; Elton v. Eason (1812), 19 Ves. 73, per GRANT, M.R., at p. 78; Heron v. Stokes (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 89, 106; Andsley v. Horn (1859), 1 De G. F. & J. 226, 236; Williams v. Lewis (1859), 6 H. L. Cas. 1013, per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., at p. 1020; Re Louman, Devenish v. Pender, [1895] 2 Ch. 348, 361, C. A. It is pointed out in Underhill and Strahan, Interpretation of Wills and Settlements, p. 220, that this statement is not correct; and in Re Jeffereson's Trusts (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 276, Wood, V.-C., at p. 280, said that that proposition could not be taken absolutely in its full integrity; it would contradict the rule established in Forth v. Chapman (1719), 1 P. Wms. 663; see pp. 770, 838, post.

(m) The preliminary question in such cases is always whether, regard being had to the whole will, and considering that the property is personal and not real estate, the words are thus used in their usual sense (Re Jeffereson's Trusts, supra, per Wood, V.-C., at p. 280). Upon a consideration of the whole will it may appear that the words "heirs of the body," and the like, describe particular persons (see, for instance, Dakin v. Nicholson (1837), 6 L. J. (cu.) 329; and p. 749, ante). The question of contrary intention is, therefore, in the first place, a question not whether the testator intended the donee to have an absolute interest or not (Garth v. Baldwin (1755), 2 Ves. Sen. 646, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 661: "a limitation of personal estate to one for life and the heirs of his body: which vests absolutely, whether so intended by the testator or not"), but whether the words of limitation are used in a sense different from their usual sense.

failure of his issue generally (r). This canon of construction has been applied even in cases where the donee himself is expressly given only a life estate (s) and the inheritable interest arose by virtue of or by analogy to the application of the rule in Shelley's Case (t) to the limitations (a), in spite of the fact that the rule in Shelley's Case itself is not strictly applicable to personal estate (b), but ought not to be applied if the result would be entirely to defeat the intention of the testator, apparent from the whole will, and capable without violation of the rules of law of being carried into effect (c); for example, the word "heirs" may describe particular persons who are intended to take by purchase (d). If the gift is limited to a donee for his life and then to his "issue," prima facie the donee takes for life only and the issue take on his death (e).

 reference to limitations of real estate.

1404. Where real and personal estate are blended together in one gift, or where the personal estate is directed to be enjoyed with the real estate, and the limitations in each case are framed in the usual technical terms creating successive estates tail in respect of real estate, the personal estate goes to the person having the first vested estate tail in the real estate (f), subject to being defeated by a donee under a prior estate tail coming into existence and taking a vested interest (g). This is not a necessary result where the estate tail is created by implication from a gift over on failure of issue (h), which as regards the personal estate may be construed to mean a failure of issue at the death of the first taker (i).

Successive limitations
 in tail of personal estate.

1405. If personal property is given to a person for life, and after his death to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders in default of such issue over, then if he has a son the latter takes an absolute interest under the above rules, but if he has no son the remainders over are not void but take effect (k); an existing ulterior remainderman in tail takes an absolute interest, subject to be divested by the birth of a person born afterwards but taking before him under the prior limitations in tail (l).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Rights Attached to the Gift Defining Interest Given.

Words defining interest given.

1406. Words referring to the rights of disposition or enjoyment by the donee or to the rights of transmission on death, to be attached to the gift, may define the interest with sufficient certainty.

Inference from rights of disposition.

1407. Where the interest is defined by the rights of disposition to be attached to the gift, it is a matter of construction of the particular will whether the intention is that the donee should have merely Curwen (1832), 5 Sim. 264. In such a gift of blended real and personal estate the donee may then take an estate tail in the real and a life interest in the personal estate (Jackson v. Calvert (1860), 1 John. & H. 235; Re Longworth, Longworth v. Campbell, [1910] 1 I. R. 23).

(h) As to such gifts over, see pp. 833, 850, post.

(i) Forth v. Chapman (1719), 1 P. Wms. 664; Tudor, L. C. Real Prop., 4th ed., p. 371; Atkinson v. Hutchinson (1734), 3 P. Wms. 258, 260, 261; the reason is that the implication in favour of the issue drawn from such a gift over cannot be supposed to exist in the case of personal property, since they cannot by any construction take under such an implied gift (Forth v. Chapman, supra, per Lord PARKER, L. C., at p. 667; see, however, Re Andrew's Will (1859), 27 Beav. 608). It is pointed out in Ex parte Wynch (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 188, 208, that in cases where the gift is of personalty alone no such rule of construction need be resorted to, for as the gift to the first taker without more would carry an absolute interest, the subsequent gift on an indefinite failure of issue would be necessarily void for remoteness.

a power of appointment(m) or a power incident to his beneficial interest(n). There is nothing in the word "disposal" essentially indicating power rather than property apart from the context(o); and where there is in the will no explicit reference to any objects or mode of execution or other characteristics of a power, and the only object of the testator's bounty is the donee (whether the gift to the donee is subject or not to executory gifts over), then the court concludes that a beneficial estate in fee simple or absolute interest, according to the nature of the property, is intended(p). Thus, a gift of property to a person, to dispose of it at his will and pleasure, or by words to that effect, where there is no gift over in default of disposition, or generally where the context does not refer to a power or trust(q), primâ facie creates an estate in fee simple in the case of real estate, and an absolute interest in the case of personal estate(r).

An absolute interest has been similarly inferred even where the testator contemplated dispositions made only by the will of the donee(s), or subject to other restrictions(a), or where the gift is of a sum of money to be paid at the death of the donee(b).

(n) Thus, "assigns" may be used as a word of limitation to show a power of alienation and nothing more (Milman v. Lane, [1901] 2 K. B. 745, 750, C. A.). A devise to a person and his assigns under the law before the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), and a devise to a person for life and his assigns in a modern will primâ facie give only estates for life (Co. prima facie gives effect to the absolute gift or gift in fee simple as such (d), and even where there is a gift over, if the power is not exercised, holds the gift over inconsistent with that absolute gift (e); the context may show, however, that the first gift was not intended to be unrestricted and absolute (f).

Where, however, property is given to a person expressly for life, and after his death to be at his disposal without more, it is difficult to infer an intention to give a greater beneficial interest than a life interest (g), and even the addition of a right of absolute disposal during the life interest may in such a case give no more than a right of enjoyment in specie during the life (h); but there is not this difficulty where the life interest is given for the purpose of introducing other limitations (for example, to children), and the further gift is given on failure of these limitations (i).

1409. A restriction on the donee's right of alienation of an interest in possession, absolute or otherwise, clearly given to him is void as repugnant to the gift (k); and where he takes an absolute interest, a gift over on his failure to dispose of the property or of whatever part of the property he does not dispose of is void (l). his death out of the property (p), this restriction may form part of a context leading to the inference that he is to take not an absolute interest or interest in fee simple, but a life or other limited interest to which a right of disposition of the property is not incident, with or without a power of appointment or enjoyment in specie (q).

Where on the context of the will the donee is given an unrestricted right of enjoyment in specie during his life, together with a right of disposition on his death, or generally, he takes an absolute interest (r). Where, however, there is no such right of disposition on death, and the testator himself provides for the destination of the property so far as undisposed of on that event, then the donee may have merely the right of enjoyment in specie for life, equivalent to a life interest with a limited non-testamentary power of disposition (s).

1414. By statute (o), where any real estate is devised in a modern will (p) to any person without any words of limitation, such devise

(m) See Sutcliffe v. Richardson (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 606 (gift of annuity "so long as she and my son should live together").

(o) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 28.

(p) In wills prior to the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), an estate for life only was prima facie conferred (Doe d. Brodbelt v. Thomson (1861), 12 Moo. P. C. C. 116; Bolton v. Bolton (1870), L. R. 5 Exch. 145; and see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 174). A contrary intention to give a fee simple might be inferred, for instance (i.) from the fact that the donee was required personally to undertake burdens, as to pay charges or annuities, the presumption being that the donee was intended to take such an estate as would enable him to comply with the direction, and indemnify himself against loss on taking the burden (Anon. (1551), Bro. (N. C.) 406; Doe d. Willey v. Holmes (1798), 8 Term Rep. 1; Goodille d. Paddy v. Maddern (1804), 4 East, 496; Blinston v. Warburton (1856), 2 K. & J. 400; Matthews v. Windross (1856), 2 K. & J. 406; Lloyd v. Jackson (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 269, 273, 274, Ex. Ch.), a presumption which, however, did not arise on the expense being charged merely on the estate given, and not on the donee personally (Denn d. Moor v. Mellor (1794), 5 Term Rep. 558; 2 Bos. & P. 247, H. L.); or (ii.) from the use by the testator in the operative part of the gift of the word "estate," "property," or any equivalent expression capable of describing the extent and sum of the testator's interest as well as the substance of the gift; although such words, used as words of reference, could not be treated as explaining a previous gift which prima facie created only a life estate, and as words describing the subject-matter only, and not the testator's interest, they might not create a larger interest than was expressly given (Bailis v. Gale (1750), 2 Ves. Sen. 48; Doe d. Bates v. Clayton (1806), 8 East, 141; Doe d. Burton v. White (1847), 1 Exch. 526; (1848), 2 Exch. 797, Ex. Ch.; Sturgis v. Dunn (1855), 19 Beav. 135; Bentley v. Oldfield (1855), 19 Beav. 225; Ed Pollard's Estate (1863), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 541, 556; Coltsmann v. Coltsmann (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 121, 129; Hill v. Brown, [1894] A. C. 122, 127, 128, P. C.); or (iii.) from gifts over on certain specified events, the time of which would be immaterial if the donee only took a life estate, and which gift over was not part of a series of limitations, when the court drew the inference that the property was not intended to be given over in any other event (Burke v. Annie (1853), 11 Hare, 232, 237; Re Harrison's Estate (1870), 5 Ch. App. 408; Pickwell v. Spencer (1872), L. R. 7 Exch. 105, Ex. Ch.; Andrew v. Andrew (1875), 1 Ch. D. 410, 418, C. A.); or (iv.) where the property was given to trustees, who by words of inheritance or by other words took a legal estate in fee in trust for the donee, without any ulterior interest in any other person, the presumption being that the equitable interest was commensurate with the legal estate (Challenger v. Shepherd (1800), 8 Term Rep. 597; Smith v. Smith (1861), 8 Jur. (N. S.) 459; Yarrow v. Knightly (1878), 3 Ch. D. 736, 739, 743, C. A.), and vice versa (Villiers v. Villiers (1740), 2 Atk. 71, 72; Challenger v. Shepherd, supra; Yarrow v. Knightly, supra, at pp. 739, 742). But the mere declaration by the testator of his intention to dispose of his whole estates or the fact of a previous devise to the heir, or the fact that the donee took jointly with the heir, did not exclude the rule (Peiton v. Banks (1682), 1 Vern. 65; Bowen v. Scowercroft (1837), 2 Y. & C. (Ex.) 640; Smith v. Smith, supra, at p. 460).

is construed to pass the fee simple or other the whole estate or interest which the testator had power to dispose of by will in such real estate (q), unless a contrary intention appears by the will (r). This rule is applicable only to real estate which exists and belongs to the testator at the time of his death, over which he has then a disposing power, and does not apply to a particular interest in real estate or an annuity or rentcharge which the testator is about to create for the first time by his will (s).

personal estate.

Whatever the date of the will, a gift of personal estate to a donee without any context restricting his interest confers on him an absolute interest (t).

Inference from fiduciary
of donee.

1415. The effect of gifts to the executors of the testator (u), or to the trustees of his will (v), as regards the character and quantity of interest given, are discussed elsewhere. Under a gift to the executors of another person, whether directly or by way of substitution for him, they prima facie take the gift as part of his estate (w), but the will may show that they were intended to take beneficially (x).

income only.

1416. A gift in a modern will (y) of the "rents and profits" or of the "income" of real estate, indefinitely, even though without words of limitation, passes the fee simple in the land (u); the (q) As to the interests which a general devise passes apart from this rule, see p. 694, ante.

(r) The contrary intention must be gathered from the whole will, as in other cases (Crumpe v. Crumpe, [1900] A. C. 127, 131; and see Pelham-Clinton v. Newcastle (Duke), [1902] 1 Ch. 34, C. A., per BUCKLEY, J., at p. 37, affirmed, [1903] A. C. 111; Gravenor v. Watkins (1871), L. R. 6 C. P. 500; Quarm v. Quarm, [1892] 1 Q. B. 184 (devise to several "as joint tenants and not as tenants in common, and to the survivor or longest liver of them, his or her heirs and assigns"); Re Gannon, Spence v. Martin, [1914] 1 I. R. 86 (interest described as a tenancy), in which cases a contrary intention appeared). In the following cases a contrary intention was held not to be shown: Wisden v. Wisden (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 396 (use of words of limitation in other gifts); Brook v. Brook (1856), 3 Sm. & G. 280 (gift to married woman for her separate property with power to appoint the same to her husband and children). The creation of successive estates after the gift in question is an indication of contrary intention, but is not necessarily an indication of an intention to create only life estates (Re Pennesfather, Savile v. Savile, [1896] 1 I. R. 249, 260). Restrictions on alienation (see p. 772, ante) may be such an indication of contrary intention (Re Sanford, Sanford v. Sanford, [1901] 1 Ch. 939, 942).

(y) In wills to which the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), does not apply, the gift would itself, and without any assistance from the context, create merely an estate for life (Hodson v. Ball (1848), 14 Sim. 558, 571).

(a) Plenty v. West (1848), 6 C. B. 201; Manno v. Greener (1872), context may, however, show an intention that the gift should not be indefinite (b).

1417. A gift of an annuity not existing before is prima facie for the life of the donee only, but the intention of the testator to give a larger interest to the donee or to make the annuity perpetual may be inferred from the language of the will in various ways (c).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Expression of the Testator's Motive or Purpose.

1418. If the purpose of the testator in making a gift is stated, and it relates to the mode of application of the gift for the benefit of certain objects and is not merely personal to the donee (for example, a gift to a person for the benefit of his children (d), or of himself and his children (e)), such purpose, if the context requires,

(c) See title RENTCHARGES AND ANNUITIES, Vol. XXIV., pp. 486 et seq., where the subject of the duration of annuities is fully dealt with.

(d) Such a gift, according to the mode of expression and the context, may make the donee, though entitled to obtain transfer of the fund (Cooper v. Thornton (1790), 3 Bro. C. C. 96; Robinson v. Tickell (1803), 8 Ves. 162) and to dispose of it (Wood v. Richardson (1840), 4 Beav. 174; McInnes v. Beaton (1905), 37 Canada Supreme Court Reports, 143), a mere trustee (see title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES, p. 92, ante), without beneficial interest (Blakeney v. Blakeney (1833), 6 Sim. 52; Wetherell v. Wilson (1836), 1 Keen, 80; Inderwick v. Inderwick (1844), 13 Sim. 652; Barnes v. Grant (1856), 26 L. J. (CH.) 92; Wainford v. Heyl (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 321; Re de la Hunt, O'Connor v. Butler, [1907] 1 I. R. 507, 511; Re Hickey, Hickey v. Hickey, [1913] 1 I. R. 390, C. A., disapproving Re Berryman, Berryman v. Berryman, [1913] 1 I. R. 21), so that the benefit to the children does not fail by the death of their parent in the life of the testator (Ford v. Fowler (1840), 3 Beav. 146; Hodgson v. Green (1842), 11 L. J. (CH.) 312).

(e) Such a gift may give the donee a beneficial interest in the entire fund subject to a trust to apply a sufficient part of the fund for the support of the children, with or without some discretion as to the application of it (Raikes v. Ward (1842), 1 Hare, 445, 450; Longmore v. Elcum (1843), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 363; Crockett v. Crockett (1848), 2 Ph. 553), which the court will not interfere with if exercised in good faith (Costabadie v. Costabadie (1847), 6 Hare, 410, 414; Hart v. Tribe (1854), 18 Beav. 215; 19 Beav. 149), but the parent is liable to account (Woods v. Woods (1836), 1 My. & Cr. 401, 409); or again, subject to a personal obligation of maintaining the children, and without liability to account so long as that obligation is performed from some source or other (Hadow v. Hadow (1838), 9 Sim. 438; Leach v. Leach (1843), 13 Sim. 304; Browne v. Paull, Hoggins v. Paull (1850), 1 Sim. (N. S.) 92, 104; Re Robertson's Trusts (1858), 6 W. R. 405; and see Gilbert v. Bennett (1839), 10 Sim. 371; Scott v. Key (1865), 11 Jur. (N. S.) 819; Lambe v. Eames (1871), 6 Ch. App. 597). In such cases, where an obligation, charge or trust is created, the court may direct an inquiry as to the proper amount to be applied (Hamley v. Gilbert (1821), Jac. 354 (there ordered in spite of express exemption from liability in the will; but compare Thurston v. Essington (1727), Jac. 361, n., H. L.); Re Booth, Booth v. Booth, [1894] 2 Ch. 282; K'Eogh v. K'Eogh, [1911] 1 I. R. 396). Where the children take beneficially, they take, according to the context, either concurrently with their parent (Jubber v. Jubber (1839), 9 Sim. 503; Wilson v. Maddison (1843), 2 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 372; Re Nolan, Sheridan v. Nolan, [1912] 1 I. R. 416) or in succession to him (Chambers v. Atkins (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 382; Re Whitty, Evans v. Evans (1881), 43 L. T. 692).

may become binding on the donee by way of trust (f) or condition (g); but if the context allows (h), the purpose is treated merely as the motive of the testator in making the gift, which is intended to increase the funds of the donee to enable him to accomplish that purpose (i), and the donee takes an unfettered interest (k).

1419. If a gift is of specified amount, and the purpose is to benefit the donee personally in a particular manner, it is a question of construction of the particular will whether the primary object of the testator is to make the specified gift to the donee, or to have the specified purpose accomplished. Prima facie, in a gift otherwise unconditional, the primary object is to make the specified gift; and the gift is unaffected by the purpose expressed (l) and takes effect, although the satisfaction of the purpose of the testator does not exhaust the whole fund, or becomes impossible through no act or default of the donee, or has already been accomplished (m);

(f) See title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES, pp. 1 et seq., ante; as to the construction of precatory words, see ibid., pp. 13 et seq., ante.

(g) The question is in such cases whether the words create a gift for the particular purpose only, or a gift subject to the performance of a particular purpose (King v. Denison (1813), 1 Ves. & B. 260; Croome v. Croome (1880), 59 L. T. 582, C. A.; 61 L. T. 814, H. L.; Re West, George v. Grose, [1900] 1 Ch. 84). As to cases when words such as "subject to," "paying," or "on condition" are used, see p. 792, post.

(h) In such cases the inference that an unfettered interest is intended may be drawn from the absence of any expression excluding the donee from taking beneficially (Thorp v. Owen (1843), 2 Hare, 607, 615, 616), or the fact of difficulty in ascertaining the amount intended to be applied for the purposes specified in every possible state of circumstances (ibid.; Cowman v. Harrison (1852), 10 Hare, 234, 239), or that the specified object necessarily depends on the choice of the named person, although he may desire it for his own convenience (Barre v. Fewkes (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 60, 65; see title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES, p. 93, ante), or that apart from the will the donee is already under an obligation for the specified object (Byne v. Blackburn (1858), 26 Beav. 41).

and the donee, if sui juris, or his representative after his death (n), is prima facie entitled to payment, without the testator's executors being bound to see to the application of the gift (o). Where, however, the specified purpose is the primary object, the donee is entitled to the gift, but only so far as applicable to that purpose (p), and for no other purpose (q); the gift may be so expressed that the cost of accomplishing that purpose may have to be paid out of the estate of the testator although the fund given is insufficient (r); and in so far as the purpose cannot be accomplished, or becomes impossible, the gift fails (s).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Concurrent Gifts.

(i.) Joint Tenancy and Tenancy in Common.

1422. Where property is given to several persons concurrently, the questions whether these persons take as joint tenants or tenants in common (b), and in the latter case what shares they take (c), depend on the context of the whole will. They prima facie take as joint tenants (d); but in considering the context it has been said that anything which in the slightest degree indicates an intention to divide the property negatives the idea of a joint tenancy (e), and that in a case of ambiguity the court leans to the construction which creates a tenancy in common in preference to that which creates a joint tenancy (f).

In certain cases, to give effect to the whole will, the severance in interest is made to commence at a future time; thus, joint estates for life and separate inheritances may be created, for example, in gifts of real estate to several persons, who cannot all marry, and the heirs of their bodies (g), or in other cases on a sufficient context, as, for example, where the heirs taking the inheritance are defined by reference to the respective donees (h).

(b) As to the nature of joint tenancy, see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., pp. 199 et seq.; as to tenancy in common see ibid., pp. 206 et seq. As to gifts to corporations and others, see title CORPORATIONS, Vol. VIII., p. 366.

The mere fact that the interest is to be divided is not sufficient to make a tenancy in common of the capital (Crooke v. De Vandes, supra, at p. 206). A description of the donees as "joint tenants," although a technical description, is not necessarily fatal to a tenancy in common (Booth v. Alington (1857), 3 Jur. (n. s.) 835). 1423. There is no necessity in the case of a gift by will for the application of the rule affecting conveyances operating at common law (i), that there can be no joint tenancy where the co-tenants come into existence at different times, or their interests vest at different times (k), although in both cases the joint tenants must take the same quantity of interest (l); but the fact that the vesting of a gift in a will must take place at different times otherwise than by the donees coming into being at different times has been treated as an indication of a tenancy in common (m).

Effect of vesting at different times.

1424. In a gift to a number of persons, and the "survivors" of them, or "with benefit of survivorship," these words may be used as words of limitation, creating a joint tenancy even where the named persons take originally as tenants in common (n).

"Survivors" as word of limitation.

1425. If there is to be a sharing, the shares must primâ facie be equal (o).

Shares equal.

(ii.) Distribution per Capita and per Stirpes.

1426. In a gift to a number of donees (for example, to the children of several persons), whether taking as a class or combination of classes or not, the distribution between them may be intended to be made per capita, in which case each donee takes a share equal in amount to the share of each other donee, or per stirpes, in which case each family or stock takes an equal share with every other family or stock, and such share is then subdivided equally between the members of such family or stock; primâ facie the distribution is made per capita and not per stirpes (p).

Quantity of Interest Given.

Inference from contexts in favour of distribution per stirpes.

1427. The context of the whole will, however, may require a stirpital distribution (q), as, for example, where the gift is to a number of parents and their children in such a manner that the children are substituted for (r) or take on the death of their respective parents (s); and gifts to several parents and at, or after, their deaths to their children, or to their issue, have received this

v. Stone, [1895] 2 Ch. 196, C. A. (children of the aforesaid). For examples in cases of gifts to a combination of classes, see Northey v. Strange (1716), 1 P. Wms. 340, 343 (children and grandchildren); Barnes v. Patch (1803), 8 Ves. 604; Dugdale v. Dugdale (1849), 11 Beav. 402; Cancellor v. Chancellor (1862), 2 Drew. & Sm. 194 (children and issue); Re Fox's Will (1865), 35 Beav. 163 (surviving brothers and sister and their children). For an example in case of a gift to named persons and a class, taking together as a single class, see Kekewich v. Barker (1903), 88 L. T. 130, H. L. For examples in cases of gifts to named persons, taking as individuals, together with a class, see Blackler v. Webb (1726), 2 P. Wms. 383; Buller v. Stratton (1791), 3 Bro. C. C. 367; Lenden v. Harper, [1914] 1 Ch. 70. For an example in case of a gift to a number of persons as individuals and not as a class, see Cooke v. Bowen (1840), 4 Y. & C. (EX.) 244. The rule is applied although the bequest is to persons who, under the statutory rule of distribution on the testator's intestacy, would take per stirpes (Lincoln (Lady) v. Pelham (1804), 10 Ves. 166, 176); and the fact that the persons taking are living relatives of the testator and the children of deceased relatives of the same relationship does not ordinarily take the case out of the rule (Blackler v. Webb, supra; Amson v. Harris, supra; Payne v. Webb (1874), 31 L. T. 637; Evans v. Turner (1904), 23 New Zealand Law Reports, 825; but compare Re Walbran, Milner v. Walbran, [1906] 1 Ch. 64 ("to be equally divided between children of A. and B."), distinguished in Re Harper, Plowman v. Harper, supra, at p. 75).

Legg* (1862), 31 Beav. 187, 193 (gift over); Re Sibley's Trusts (1877), 5 Ch. D. 494. As, for instance, where the number of shares is mentioned and is equal to the number of the parents (Overton v. Bannister (1841), 4 Beav. 205), or the words imply a further subdivision of a share (Davis v. Bennett (1862), 4 De G. F. & J. 327, 329; Capes v. Dalton (1902), 86 L. T. 129, C. Bartrum* (1860), 28 Beav. 219. As to substitutional gifts, see p. 729, ante. No presumption in favour of distribution per stirpes arises in case of an original alternative gift to issue (Abbey v. Howe (1847), 1 De G. & Sm. 470); but the description of issue by reference to their "respective" parents (Re Coulden, Coulden v. Coulden, [1908] 1 Ch. 320, 326), or a direction that the issue are to take their parents' share (Shand v. Kidd (1854), 19 Beav. 310), are indications of distribution per stirpes.

(s) The word "respective" in such cases points to a stirpital distribution (Archer v. Legg, supra, at p. 191; Re Campbell's Trusts (1886), 33 Ch. D. 98, C. A.; Hunt v. Dorsett (1855), 5 De G. M. & G. 570; compare Bovill v. Ffoues (1844), 1 Coll. 6; Smith v. Streetfield (1816), 1 Mer. 355, 361; Aycough v. Savage (1865), 13 W. R. 373, C. A.). construction as meaning at or after their respective deaths (a). Where, however, the children of all the parents are mentioned together as forming a single group or class to take under a single gift without any other indication of distribution per stirpes, the children take per capita (u). If the gift is postponed to the death of all the parents, then where the intermediate income after the death of any parent is given to or is to be applied for the benefit of his children per stirpes, this fact is an element to be considered in favour of distribution of the capital per stirpes (w), but does not rebut a clear direction that the distribution is to be per capita (a).

1428. In the case of a gift where issue are substituted for or take after their respective ancestors, the members of each set of issue primâ facie take per capita as between themselves the share which is distributed per stirpes to them (b); but the context may show that the substitution is distributive throughout and a per stirpes distribution intended (c). A characteristic of distribution per stirpes is that remote descendants do not take in competition with a living immediate ancestor of their own who takes under the gift (d).

Substitution of issue.

1429. The determination of the persons forming the stocks from which the stirpes are to spring is a matter of construction of each will; it appears that, primâ facie, the stocks should be persons who might themselves take under the gift, as, for example, the original takers for tion of stocks.

SUB-SECT. 8.—Cumulative and Substituted Gifts.

1430. A testator may well intend to give two or more gifts, of equal or unequal amounts, to the same donee, and where the intention to do so is clear, it is effectuated (g).

1431. Where two legacies are given by the same testamentary instrument to the same person described in the same terms in each case (h), and are of the same specific thing or of the same specified amount, the second is presumed to be merely a repetition of the first (i), and the legatee primâ facie takes only one such legacy; but if such legacies are of different specified amounts (k), or have substantially different incidents (l), or if one is a residuary gift and the other a specific or pecuniary legacy (m), the second legacy is presumed to be cumulative, and the legatee primâ facie takes both (n).

1432. If the same specific thing is given by two different testamentary instruments (o) to the same person, the second gift is

Dyke* (1981), 44 L. T. 568, 570. The question in each case is what is the intention collected from the whole will (Guy v. Sharp (1833), 1 My. & K. 589, 603). 1433. The context of the instruments may, however, lead to a contrary inference (r); thus, where the later gift is of the same specified amount as the earlier (a), and is expressed to be given for the same cause or motive (b), the later gift is primâ facie merely a repetition of the first (c); and generally, whatever the amounts of the legacies, the later instrument may purport to explain (d), Masters* (1718), 1 P. Wms. 421, 423; Lee v. Pain, supra, at pp. 223, 224 (legacies carrying interest from different dates and to legatee by different descriptions)).

(r) The fact that other legacies to other donees in the same will are given in terms expressly making them cumulative is some indication that legacies not so described are substitutional (Allen v. Dickson (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 133, 139), but is of slight importance in rebutting a presumption applicable to the case (Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, supra, at p. 273; Suisse v. Lowther (Lord), supra, at p. 430; and see Wray v. Field, supra); and the fact that legacies are given in terms making the substitutional does not make other legacies not so described substitutional, where the presumption that they are cumulative is otherwise applicable (Re Armstrong, Mayne v. Woodward (1893), 31 L. R. Ir. 154).

(a) There is no presumption of repetition raised if in either instrument there is no motive or no motive other than the testator's own bounty (Suisse v. Lowther (Lord), supra, at p. 432), or a different motive expressed, although the sums are the same, or where the same motive is expressed in both and the legacies are of different amounts (Hurst v. Beach (1821), 5 Madd. 351, 358, 359).

O'Leary* (1872), 7 Ch. App. 448, JAMES, L.J., at p. 455, said he did not know exactly what was meant by the expression "the same cause," as used in the rule, instancing legacies to a child or friend, which are made because the donee is a child or friend, and that perhaps the same might be said of every case of testamentary bounty except the giving a certain sum to an executor for his trouble. Where the gift in each case is to a person by description, for example, to "my servant," the descriptive words are not an expression of motive (Loch v. Callen (1848), 6 Hare, 531, 534); and see Suisse v. Lowther (Lord), supra.

repeat (e), or be in substitution for (f) the earlier instrument in respect of the gift, or otherwise to be the final declaration of the testator's intentions (g), when accordingly the later gift supersedes the earlier: the above canons of construction are applicable only to cases in which there is no internal evidence of intention in the instruments themselves (h).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Successive Interests.

Presumption
as to interests of donees named together.

1434. The context of a will may show that persons named together as donees were intended to take successively (i), either in the order of their names (k) or according to seniority in age (l), whichever is appropriate to the context and the circumstances of the case; without such a context a gift to persons named together

(e) Moggridge v. Thackwell (1792), 1 Ves. 464 ("simple repetition, where it is exact and punctual, has been regarded as sufficient proof" that the legacies were not cumulative); Tatham v. Drummond (1864), 33 L. J. (CH.) 438; and see Hubbard v. Alexander (1876), 3 Ch. D. 738; Beynon v. Beynon (1810), 17 Ves. 34, 42 (gift of income of trust legacy altered). Thus, many legacies may be given to the same donees in the same or nearly the same terms as in the prior instrument (Coote v. Boyd (1785), 1 Bro. C. C. 448; 2 Bro. C. C. 521; Barclay v. Wainwright (1797), 3 Ves. 462; Whyte v. Whyte (1873), L. R. 17 Eq. 50 (instruments of same date and contents); and see the cases cited in note (f), infra. In Wilson v. O'Leary (1872), 7 Ch. App. 448, this was not sufficient in the context and circumstances of that case to rebut the presumption that the legacies were cumulative.

Craddock* (1858), 4 Jur. (N. S.) 626. In the case of real estate, a direction for settlement on children in succession may be "an epitome of a strict settlement" (Doe d. Phipps v. Mulgrave (Lord) (1793), 5 Term Rep. 320, 324; Tyrone (Earl) v. Waterford (Marquis) (1860), 1 De G. F. & J. 613, 623).

1435. In certain cases a gift of a succession of interests in real estate to donees, some of whom are not allowed by law to take as purchasers, is construed under the cy-près doctrine to be a gift of an estate tail in one of them, where that estate if allowed to descend unbarred would carry the property to the donees and no others (b); and words referring to successive generations may be descriptive of the descent of an estate tail and used as words of limitation (c).

(i.) Gifts to a Person and his Children.

1436. In a gift to a donee "and his children" or to a donee "and his issue" (d), the last words in each case are capable of being used as words of limitation (e), or words of description of persons to take either concurrently with or in succession to the named donee (f), or in substitution for him (g).

(i) This is the rule in Wild's Case (1599), 6 Co. Rep. 16 b, 17 a (sub nom. Richardson v. Yardley, Moore (K. B.), 397, pl. 519; Anon., Gouldsb. 139, pl. 47), as stated in *Byng v. Cas. 239 (a case of executory trust; issue took as purchasers). The reason for the rule is stated in Wild's Case, supra: "the intent of the deviser is manifest and certain that his children or issues should take, and as immediate devisees they cannot take, because they are not in rerum natura, and by way of remainder they cannot take, for that was not his intent for the gift is immediate"; compare Radcliffe v. Buckley (1804), 10 Ves. 195, 201.

context may show, however, that the unborn children are to take as purchasers (k). On the other hand, if he has a child or children at the time of the devise, then the will is prima facie construed as giving a joint estate to him and his children as purchasers (l); even in the latter case, however, the context may show that the word is a word of limitation and that an estate tail is intended (m), or that the children take in succession to their parents and as purchasers (n).

It seems that for the purpose of these canons of construction an only child en ventre sa mère is not regarded as in existence (o).

When rule is applied.

1438. The rule only applies where the testator has not sufficiently indicated his intention; it has no application therefore where the devise to the children would, without reference to the rule, be a gift in succession to and not concurrently with their parent (p). The court has always considered itself at liberty to disregard the rule in

Accordingly, the rule in Wild's Case (1599), 6 Co. Rep. 16 b, 17 a, is inapplicable unless the interests of the parent and children are both concurrent; thus it does not apply to gifts to the parent for life and after his death to his children (Chandler v. Gibson (1901), 2 Ontario Law Reports, 442; Grant v. Fuller (1902), 33 Canada Supreme Court Reports, 34, 37; Re Sharon and Stuart (1906), 12 Ontario Law Reports, 605, 609, 610; and see the text, infra); but it appears that the rule is not confined to cases where those interests are immediate, but applies also to postponed gifts (Broadhurst v. Morris (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 1; but see Ruffar v. Bradford (1741), 2 Atk. 220, 222 (legacy postponed to life estate: "it is the time of possession in the present case, which takes it out of the reasoning in Wild's Case")).

(k) Re Moyles' Estate (1878), 1 L. R. Ir. 155, C. A. (words of limitation applying to children's interest). The addition of words of limitation does not affect the rule where they can be read as referring to the first donee himself and as describing his interest (Wharton v. Gresham (1776), 2 Wm. Bl. 1083; Cormack v. Copous (1853), 17 Beav. 397, 401). The addition of a power of appointment in the parent does not necessarily preclude the application of the rule (Seale v. Barter (1801), 2 Bos. & P. 485; Clifford v. Koe (1880), 5 App. Cas. 447, 457, 458, 469). The application of the rule is assisted by a gift over on failure of issue indefinitely (Clifford v. Koe, supra, at pp. 454, 468; see Broadhurst v. Morris, supra (failure of "such" issue at death), but such a gift over does not create an estate tail in the parent (compare p. 850, post) where there are indications that the children are to take as purchasers in fee simple (Doe d. Davy v. Burnisall (1794), 6 Term Rep. 30 (to A. and the issue of her body (in the context meaning children) as tenants in common if more than one)). The rule applies to a limitation to the donee "and his child or children for ever" (Davis v. Stevens (1780), 1 Doug. (K. B.) 321; Broadhurst v. Morris, supra).

Waterford (Marquis)* (1860), 1 De G. F. & J. 613, 624 ("children in succession").

(n) Jeffery v. Honeywood (1819), 4 Madd. 398 (where words of limitation were added to the limitation to the issue); Bowen v. Scovcroft (1837), 2 Y. & C. (Ex.) 640, 661. It was said, however, in Webb v. Byng, supra, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 673, that Jeffery v. Honeywood, supra, was overruled in Broadhurst v. Morris, supra, but in the last-mentioned case no ratio decidendi is reported and Jeffery v. Honeywood, supra, was not cited; see also note (r), p. 789, post.

both its branches where an adherence to it would defeat the intention of the testator as collected from other passages of his will (g).

Moreover, in a case where there is a devise of real estate to a named person, and after his decease to his children, although he has no children at the time of the devise, yet every child which he has may take under the limitation by way of remainder (r).

1439. The above rule has strictly no application to personal estate (s), but in cases where in bequests to a person and his children the word "children" is used as a word of limitation, the named person takes an absolute interest (a). Under a bequest of personal estate to a named person and his children the parent and the children primâ facie take concurrently (b) as joint tenants (c), but the context may point to a different conclusion (d),

The rule was excluded on this ground in Grieve v. Grieve (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 180 (gift of furniture with the real estate), doubted in Clifford v. Koe, supra, at pp. 461, 462.

R. 168 (Lord PLUNKET, L.C.), Lord BROUGHAM, at pp. 183 et seq., considered that the rule (probably meaning the second branch of the rule; see the text, infra, and note (b), infra), applied to personal estate, and referred to Buffar v. Bradford (1741), 2 Atk. 220, Doe d. Gigg v. Bradley (1812), 16 East, 399, and Oates d. Hatterley v. Jackson (1742), 2 Stra. 1172, as supporting that opinion, whilst Lord CAMPBELL, at p. 198, inclined to that opinion, but left the question open. In cases of bequests of personal estate the word "children" is not, as a rule, a word of limitation (Buffar v. Bradford, supra).

The class of children is ascertained according to the usual rules (see pp. 714 et seq., ante); and, therefore, no child born after the death of the testator, in the case of an immediate gift, can be let in (De Witte v. De Witte, supra); but in the case of a postponed gift, after-born children may be let in (Cook v. Cook (1706), 2 Vern. 545; Read v. Willis (1840), 1 Coll. 86; *Lenden v. and it has been said (e) that slight circumstances have been laid hold of by the courts as enabling them to come to the conclusion that a gift for life to the named person and after his death to his children was intended (f). The interests are presumed to be successive, for example, where all the children of the donee, whether born before or after the death of the testator, are intended to take (g), or where there is a gift over on failure of issue of the parent, or other provision showing that the property is contemplated as still subsisting undivided at the death of the parent (h), or otherwise inconsistent with the parent taking an interest in the capital together with the children (i).

parent took absolutely). If the gift is to a married woman and her children free from the control of her husband, or with any like condition giving her a separate use and applying to the whole fund, a succession of interests is indicated, for otherwise the separate use could not be applied to the whole fund (French v. French (1840), 11 Sim. 257; Bain v. Lescher (1840), 11 Sim. 397; Froggatt v. Wardell (1850), 3 De G. & Sm. 685; Jeffrey v. De Vitre (1857), 24 Beav. 296, not following Witte v. Witte (1840), 11 Sim. 41; Bustard v. Saunders (1845), 7 Beav. 92); but a separate use applying only to the wife's interest in the whole fund is not sufficient to indicate such a succession of interests (Re Seyton, Seyton v. Satterthwaite (1887), 34 Ch. D. 511 (statutory provision for the benefit of "his wife for her separate use and of his children"). The fact that the gift is to the testator's wife and his children does not exclude the ordinary rule that they take concurrently (Newell v. Newell (1872), 7 Ch. App. 253, 259; and compare Re Seyton, Seyton v. Satterthwaite, supra; Re Davies's Policy Trusts, [1892] 1 Ch. 90, not following Re Adam's Policy Trusts (1883), 23 Ch. D. 525). In a gift to a person, his wife and children, the rule applies subject to the rule as to the effect of gifts to a person and his wife with other persons (Gordon v. Whilldon (1848), 11 Beav. 170); see title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., p. 354; p. 780, ante.

Thus, a direction that the fund is "to be secured for their use" or similar direction has been considered to show an intention to settle (Vaughan v. Headfort (Marquis) (1840), 10 Sim. 639; French v. French (1840), 11 Sim. 257 (in trust as aforesaid); Combe v. Hughes (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 415; Re Mills, Mills v. Mills (1902), 22 New Zealand Law Reports. 425), although a gift to the named person as trustee for himself and children, without more, is not sufficient (Newell v. Newell, supra, at p. 258). A separate gift to two of the children affected the decision in Re Owen's Trusts (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 316. As to whether or in what cases a power of appointment among the children may be held to be created, see Ward v. Grey (1858), 26 Beav. 485, 494, observed upon in *Hart v. (ii.) Gifts to a Person and his Issue.

1440. In the case of a devise of real property to a person "and his issue" the word "issue" is primâ facie used as a word of limitation (k); the devise is then equivalent to a devise to the donee and the heirs of his body, and he therefore takes an estate tail (l). Particularly, the word "issue" in such a gift is a word of limitation where there are no issue at the date of the will (m). Where the context, however, shows that the issue are to take under the gift as purchasers, then they primâ facie take as joint tenants with the named person (n).

1441. In a gift of personal estate to a person and his issue (o) they primâ facie take by purchase (p), and concurrently as joint tenants (q), but the context and the circumstances may show an intention to the contrary. Thus, gifts of personal estate to a person and his issue have in several cases conferred an absolute interest on him (r), particularly where there was a gift over on failure of issue generally (s); in such cases the context showed that the words were used as words of limitation, and it seems that there is no canon of construction to indicate when they are so used (t); in several cases under such a limitation the issue have taken alternatively only, in case their ancestor was not in existence at the time of distribution, either by way of substitution (u) or by way of original gift (w), or have taken in succession to their parent (x).

SECT. 7.—Conditional Gifts.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Conditions in General.

Words prima facie not
conditional.

1442. Where the testator has by any means (a) clearly attached conditions or obligations to his gifts, his expressed intention is paramount (b); but where the will is not clear, it is a settled rule of construction that words are not construed as importing a condition, particularly a condition of forfeiture, if they are fairly capable of another interpretation (c).

Creation of trust or charge.

Words expressing a condition may be treated as forming words of limitation (d) or merely creating a trust (e) or charge, particularly if the gift is a devise to the testator's heir-at-law (f).

A gift upon condition that the donee makes certain payments for the benefit of other persons (g), or a gift subject to such payments (h), is generally construed, in cases where in the circumstances existing at the date of the will some surplus could remain out of the property after making the payments, as constituting those payments a charge on the property given (i); and in cases where no substantial surplus could remain after making the payments at the date of the will, as constituting the donee a trustee of the property (k). When the surplus is appropriated to a purpose which may or may not require the whole of it to be applied, the question is one of construction of the particular will (l).

(t) "That the word 'issue' may in gifts of personal property be a word of limitation no one doubts, but, in my judgment, whether it be so or not is purely a question of construction on each particular instrument, the court which has to interpret such instrument being unfettered by any general rule" (Re Coulten, Coulten v. Coulten, [1908] 1 Ch. 320, per PARKER, J., at p. 324). To hold "issue" in such a case to be a word of limitation would, by conferring an absolute interest on the ancestor, deprive the issue of all benefit under the will (ibid.).

SECT. 7.
Conditions
Gifts.

1443. A condition attached to the first of a series of gifts may attach alone to that one, or generally throughout the series (m).

Conditions
attaching to a series.
Gifts by reference.

In a gift expressly made "in the same manner" as another gift, the reference may be to the conditions attached by the testator (n) to the mode of enjoyment only (o), and not to the mode of settlement, if any, of that gift (p), or other restrictions (q) (as appears to be the construction prima facie adopted (r)), or, especially if there is nothing else to refer to, may be to all the gifts over and other conditions of that gift (s).

(i) As to the charge made in the case of a gift of an annuity out of the income of a fund, and "subject" thereto a gift of the corpus, see title RENTCHARGES AND ANNUITIES, Vol. XXIV., p. 493, notes (i), (k).

(k) Wright v. Wilkin (1860), 2 B. & S. 232, affirmed (1862), 2 B. & S. 259, Ex. Ch.; A.-G. v. Wax Chandlers' Co. (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 1; Bird v. Harris (1870), L. R. 9 Eq. 204; Re Corcoran, Corcoran v. O'Kane, [1913] 1 L. R. 1, 7. In both cases the refusal to perform the condition or the death of the donee does not disappoint those entitled under the condition (Re Kirk, Kirk v. Kirk (1882), 21 Ch. D. 431, C. A.). The question has arisen chiefly in cases of charitable gifts of sums payable out of income (Thetford School Case (1610), 8 Co. Rep. 130 b; see title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., pp. 176 et seq.).

(l) A.-G. v. Wax Chandlers' Co., supra, at pp. 9, 10.

(m) For examples of cases where the application of a condition to several gifts was in question, see Cockrill v. Hitchforth (1845), 1 Coll. 626; Doe d. Bailey v. Sloggett (1850), 5 Exch. 107; Paylor v. Pegg (1857), 24 Beav. 105 (gifts commencing with "likewise"), distinguishing Boosey v. Gardener (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 122; Gordon v. Gordon (1871), L. T. 175. *For examples where the question of vesting is concerned, see p. 802, post.

(n) As a rule, the court does not look for conditions affixed by law to the donees' interests (Ord v. Ord (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 393, 396).

(o) As, for instance, the separate use (Shanley v. Baker (1799), 4 Ves. 731), or tenancy in common (Lumley v. Robbins (1853), 10 Hare, 621, 629; Re Wilder's Trusts (1859), 27 Beav. 418), or condition as to marriage, if valid (Younge v. Furse (1857), 8 De G. M. & G. 756), attached to the gift referred to.

(p) Eames v. Anstee (1863), 33 Beav. 264, 267; In the Will of Green, Crowson v. Wild, [1907] Victorian Law Reports, 284.

(q) As, for instance, a restriction on the class of persons taking may not be imported (Yardley v. Yardley (1858), 26 Beav. 38; Pigott v. Wilder (1858), 26 Beav. 90; Re Wilder's Trusts, supra; see, contra, Swift v. Swift (1863), 32 L. J. (Ch.) 479).

SMOY, 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

Cumulative and substituted legacies.

Legacies given expressly (t) or impliedly (u) in addition to or in substitution for a legacy previously given, so as to vary the amount of that legacy (x), are primâ facie subject to the like conditions, if any, as are imposed on the original legacy (a), in respect of the mode of enjoyment of such legacy (b), but the context or the circumstances may exclude this rule (c). It does not apply, unless the context requires it (d), to cases where its application would alter the limitations of the property, so as to make the property pass under a gift over or course of settlement (e), or where the character of the gifts is entirely

(t) The rule applies more especially to such cases of an express declaration; the presumption is that the testator merely intended to alter the amount of the legacy (Re Boden, Boden v. Boden, [1907] 2 Ch. 132, 149, 150, C. A.).

(u) Johnstone v. Harrowby (Earl) (1859), 1 De G. F. & J. 183; but the rule is apparently doubted in this respect in Re Boden, Boden v. Boden, supra, per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at pp. 149, 150.

(x) It seems that the rule is confined to questions of amount, though it may not be impossible to extend it (Re Joseph, Pain v. Joseph, [1908] 2 Ch. 507, per FARWELL, L.J., at p. 512); see Barry v. Crundall (1835), 7 Sim. 430 (in the context trustees only were changed); Fenton v. Farington (1856), 2 Jur. (N. S.) 1120 (alteration of fund provided for payment).

(a) Leacroft v. Maynard (1791), 3 Bro. C. C. 233 (charged on same fund); Crowder v. Olwoves (1794), 2 Ves. 449 (raisable out of same property); Cooper v. Bathy (1912), 106 L. T. 588 (limitation of gift during spinsterhood). In particular, as to the cases where one legacy is given free of legacy duty, see title ESTATE AND OTHER DEATH DUTIES, Vol. XIII., p. 241, note (s); but compare Burrows v. Cottrell (1830), 3 Sim. 375; Re Boden, Boden v. Boden, supra, per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., dissentiente, at p. 150.

(b) Conditions as to the mode of settlement are primâ facie not imported; the rule may thus be applied where the original legacy is given absolutely or subject to defeasance, but not as a rule in other cases (Re Mores' Trust (1852), 10 Hare. 171, per TURNER, V.-C., at p. 176; *Mann v. different (f), or where in the case of a substituted legacy the legatee of the substituted legacy is not the same as the legatee of the original legacy (g).

SECT. 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

A clause of accruer, which divests and disposes of the share of a donee dying before a particular time, or in particular circumstances, prima facie refers only to the original share of that donee, and does not extend to shares which themselves have accrued under such clause (h). A similar rule applies in other cases where the description of the property subject to the clause of accruer is not necessarily comprehensive both of the donee's original share and of his other shares or of his whole interest under the gifts in question, including the clauses of accruer (i), but does not apply where the clause clearly refers to his whole interest in the fund (k), or to a plurality of shares of a single donee (l). The word "share" alone, or a similar word, may also be explained by the context to mean the donee's whole interest (m), for example, by any expression directing the accrued shares to devolve in a similar way to the original shares (a), or by a context treating the accrued shares.

Evans* (1858), 25 Beav. 81, 88 (his or her share). Pain v. Benson (1744), 3 Atk. 78 (his, her, or their shares), is adversely criticised on this point. A description of the property subject to the clause of accruer in terms such as "his, her, or their share or shares" may be read reddendo singula singulis, "shares" corresponding to "their," and, therefore, as not denoting a plurality of the shares of a single donee (Bright v. Rowe, supra; Rickett v. Guillemard, supra; Wilmot v. Flewitt (1865), 11 Jur. (N. S.) 820, 821; Sutton v. Sutton (1892), 30 L. R. Ir. 251, 268, C. A. (a deed)).

Generally, the conditions applicable to an original share are not applicable to the share accrued thereto under a clause of accruer (d), unless the intention is shown or can be inferred to the contrary (e).

1444. The conditions of a gift may be altered by the court to conform to the rest of the will where the context makes such alteration necessary (f), or may be inferred from the context of the whole will and the circumstances of the case (g); the court, however, does not readily insert words to prevent vesting (h).

1445. Whenever there is an interest validly limited by will, either by way of remainder or by way of executory interest, if all the preceding estates have failed or determined and the events on which the interest is limited have taken effect, it is in general immaterial whether this has happened in the lifetime of the testator or after his decease (i). Thus, in cases of a gift over on a prior named individual donee dying in any contingent circumstances (k),

(k) As where the gift over is on death before twenty-one, and the prior donee dies during the life of the testator not having attained twenty-one or dying before any specified time or event (l), the gift over as a rule takes effect if the prior donee so dies during the life of the testator (m). A gift over on a prior donee dying without having attained a vested interest takes effect if that prior donee dies in the lifetime of the testator, although he otherwise satisfies the conditions of the prior gift (a). The will, however, on its true construction may refer only to events taking place after the death of the testator, or other time (b).

Brownlow (Earl)* (1853), 4 H. L. Cas. 1, 157, 183; Murphy v. Broder (1874), 9 I. R. C. L. 123, 130. It has been suggested that a condition is likely to be a condition precedent, for example, where the condition involves anything in the nature of consideration (Acherley v. Vernon (1725), Willes, 153, per Willes, C.J.; Theobald, Wills, 7th ed., p. 568), such as a release of dower (Wheddon v. Ozenham (1731), 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 546, pl. 24), or where the nature of the interest is such as to allow time for the performance of the act before enjoyment, or where the condition is capable of being performed instantly (Jarman, Wills, 6th ed., p. 1475). These suggestions are considered in Fitzgerald v. Ryan, [1899] 2 I. R. 637, 646, 647, C. A. For cases where the allowance of a period of time for the performance of the condition, extending to the life of the donee, did not prevent the condition being precedent, see also *Randall v. be considered (e); and the presumption in favour of vesting (f) is applied only where the context is not clear (g).

If, however, on construction it is doubtful whether a condition is precedent or subsequent, the court prima facie takes it as subsequent; a condition is not construed as precedent unless clearly so intended, where a construction of the condition as subsequent is consistent with the whole will (h). Accordingly, in cases of doubt, the presumption is in favour of the early vesting of the gift at the testator's death or at the earliest moment after that date which is possible in the context (i), whether it is of real (k) or personal (l) estate; and it is presumed that the testator intended the gift to be vested, subject to being divested, rather than to remain in suspense (m).

When applied. Cases where the presumption is rendered especially applicable are those where the interest created is a remainder (n), or where the donees are the children of a named person as a class (o), or where the gift is of a residuary personal estate or residuary real and personal estate (p).

1447. Where a condition can be fairly read as postponing merely the right of possession or of obtaining payment, transfer, or conveyance, so that there is an express or implied distinction between the time of vesting and time of enjoyment, this construction is adopted, if the rest of the context allows (g). This construction is particularly applicable where the postponement is for the convenience of the testator's estate (r), or is occasioned by the gift of some prior interest filling up the interval (s).

SECT. 7.

Conditional Gifts.

Presumption grounded on nature of postponement.

Thus, where the testator suspends the enjoyment until payment of his debts (t), or other incident of administration of his estate (a), prima facie the vesting is not suspended until such payment or other event; the nature of the provision shows that it is merely the enjoyment which is postponed. On the other hand, there may be an intention clearly expressed (b) to suspend vesting until such an event (c), to which effect must be given however inconvenient it may be (d). Similarly, although if the context is clear vesting of a legacy may be postponed until actual payment (e), in a case of doubt the court interprets a gift apparently vesting on payment as vesting when the legacy becomes payable (f).

directing, for example, that the gift is to vest on a certain event, this word must primâ facie be given its proper legal meaning of vesting in interest (g), and the gift is then contingent until the happening of the event (h), whether the gift is of real or personal estate (i). The context may show, however, by indications that the donee takes a vested interest before the specified event, that the word "vest" is used in another sense, for example in the sense of "fall into possession" (a), or "become payable" (b), or "be indefeasibly vested" (c); in the last case the gift may be vested, subject only to be divested if the event does not happen. A direction with regard to vesting of a gift to a class may, on the construction of a particular will, even introduce a new category of persons to share in the gift (d).

Where the postponement of the gift is on account of some qualification attached to the donee, the gift is prima facie contingent on this qualification being acquired (g).

A gift to a person, "at," "if," "as soon as," "when," or "provided" he attains a certain age, without further context to govern the meaning of the words, is contingent, and vests only on attainment of the required age (h), which is a quality or description which the donee must in general possess in order to claim under the gift (i). In a similar gift to a class, the specified age in general determines the persons who may claim as members of the class (k).

Such words, however, in various contexts have been held not really to import contingency in the sense of a condition precedent to the vesting, but to mean a proviso or condition subsequent operating as a defeasance of a vested estate (l).

the property the subject-matter of the gift (m) and the precise extent of the interest of the donee (n) become ascertainable.

1451. A contingency which is a condition precedent to vesting of a particular estate or interest prima facie applies to all interests dependent on that estate or interest or limited in immediate succession to that estate or interest as a continuous series (o), but not to other limitations (p). Further, even if gifts follow other gifts as if all contingent on a certain event (a), the court may infer from the will, taken as a whole, that it was a mere inaccuracy of expression, and that the contingency was really only meant to apply to such of the subsequent trusts and limitations as necessarily depended for their existence on the happening of the event in question (b).

1452. Words which, though in the form of a condition, merely denote that the gift is to come into possession on the failure or at the determination of prior interests, do not as a general rule form a condition precedent to vesting (c). In order, however, that a gift in such terms may be vested, the condition upon which the gift is dependent must involve no incident but what is essential to the failure or determination of the interests previously limited (d), and must be equivalent to "subject to the interests previously given" (e); if any superadded condition, not connected with the previous limitation, is imposed by the testator, that condition must be fulfilled prior to vesting (f).

SECT. 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

1453. If an ultimate gift is made to take effect on the failure of a preceding gift in a particular manner, but the court can gather that the meaning of the testator is that the ultimate limitation should take effect on the failure of the preceding gift in any manner whatever, then, although the language in which the ultimate gift is expressed does not in terms apply to the event which has happened, the ultimate gift takes effect, and the particular manner of failure of the preceding gift is not a condition precedent to vesting (g).

Gift over on particular event taking
generally.

This principle does not, however, enable a gift over to take effect on an event not provided for where the prior donees come into existence and satisfy the conditions of their gift during the life of the testator, and the failure of the prior gift is due to lapse by the deaths of the prior donees in the life of the testator (h).

Hartnoll (1880), 13 Ch. D. 858. "It is impossible to annex to an estate previously clearly given an additional condition from words which are capable of being rendered historically, that is, which may be interpreted as a description only of what must occur before the estate given to the person in remainder can arise" (Edgeworth v. Edgeworth (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 35, per Lord WESTBURY, at p. 41). The principle may be applied not only where the contingency in question is a condition subsequent for the determination of the previous gift, but where it is a condition precedent to that gift (Re Sanforth's Will, [1901] W. N. 152). A gift in default of appointment under a power is not of itself contingent on the exercise of that power; as to the divesting of such gifts by appointments under the power, see title POWERS, Vol. XXIII., p. 45.

Restriction on this canon of construction.

Examples of application.

1454. In all these cases it is necessary to find in the will and the nature of the provision some indication of the intention of the testator to this effect (i); the event upon which the gift over is alleged to come into operation, as well as upon the events expressly mentioned in the will, must be an event implied by, if not expressly indicated by, the will (k).

Thus, if there is a conditional limitation over of an estate defeating a prior absolute interest, and the latter by any means whatever is out of the way, the subsequent limitation may take effect (l). Again, where there is a prior particular interest given, with remainder to a person unborn, and on the death of the donee in remainder, or on his death under age, there is a gift over, then, though the unborn person never came into existence (m) and so could not literally fulfil the condition of dying, or dying under twenty-one, it is inferred that the gift over is to take effect (n), whenever it can do so in immediate succession to the prior 393; 4 Term Rep. 706; Humberstone v. Stanton (1813), 1 Ves. & B. 385; Ooz v. Parker (1856), 22 Beav. 169. In Williams v. Chitty, Chitty v. Chitty (1797), 3 Ves. 545, the contrary contention was abandoned. These cases were explained in Kellett v. Kellett (1871), 5 I. R. Eq. 298, 305. The same rule applies in a case where the prior donees are a class (Brookman v. Smith (1872), L. R. 7 Exch. 271, approving Tarback v. Tarback (1830), 4 L. J. (Ch.) 129); and it appears to apply to a gift by way of substitution (see p. 729, ante), where the events giving rise to the substitutional gift do not happen (see Hannam v. Sims (1858), 2 De G. & J. 151, C. A., per TURNER, L.J., at p. 154). The fact that the prior gift fails by reason of some rule of law, such as the law of mortmain, may not, however, prevent the gift over from taking effect according to this principle (Hall v. Warren (1861), 9 H. L. Cas. 420, disapproving A.-G. v. Hodgson (1846), 15 Sim. 146, and Philpott v. St. George's Hospital (1855), 21 Beav. 134, reversed on another point (1857), 6 H. L. Cas. 338). As to cases where the event provided for happens, and the prior donee dies in the life of the testator, see p. 796, ante.

limitation in the manner of a remainder (o). In cases where a gift is made with an obligation imposed on the donee to do some act, with a gift over in default of performance, then it is inferred that the gift over is also to take effect if the donee dies in the testator's lifetime without having performed the condition (p) or fails to come into existence (q).

SMO. 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

Where the testator makes a gift to a woman of an interest for her life if she so long remains unmarried, and then directs that in the event of her marrying the property shall go over to another, without more, then the gift over takes effect upon the determination of her estate, whether she marries again or not; upon her marriage, if she marries, and upon her death, if not (r). Conversely where the first gift is during widowhood, and the gift over is on death, the court infers that the gift over is to take effect also on remarriage (s).

Gift over on marriage or death interchangeably.

So, too, where, after a gift to one person for his life or until some event such as bankruptcy, there is a gift over on some of such events, but the other events are ignored by the testator, the court infers that the gift over is also to take effect on death or on the other events, in a case where the inference is consistent with the whole will (t).

Bankruptcy or death interchangeably.

(o) In Evers v. Challis (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 531, 549, 555, the case of Gulliver d. Fulham v. Wickett (1741), 1 Wils. 105, is explained as based on the doctrines relating to contingent remainders; and the gift in Evers v. Challis, supra, was held valid and able to take effect as a contingent remainder. The doctrine does not apply to a gift over by way of executory devise, the contingencies in which cannot be split so accurately to correspond with the events that have happened (Hancock v. Watson, [1902] A. C. 14). It applies, however, to limitations of personal estate which may take effect immediately on the termination of prior limitations in the manner of a remainder (Jones v. Westcomb (1711), Prec. Ch. 316).

This doctrine was held not to extend to a gift over to the woman with other persons on her remarriage, so as to make it take effect on her death, in Pile v. Salter (1832), 5 Sim. 411; but this case is said to be wrongly decided in Underhill v. Roden, supra, and has not been followed in Wardroper v. Outfield, supra, and *Scarborough v. SECT. 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

Inferences
from gifts over or other clauses.

1455. A gift over or other clause may be an indication of intention more or less valuable according to the context and the circumstances (a). Ambiguous words in an original gift may be explained by unambiguous words in a gift over (b) or other subsequent clause (c); but where the words in an original gift are plain and unambiguous taken by themselves, a gift over confined to one particular event does not compel the court to place a forced construction upon the original gift (d).

A gift to a donee at a specified age, followed by a gift over on his death before that age without issue, is prima facie vested independently of that age (e).

heir etc.

1456. In a case where the court finds an intention expressed that a person claiming under the testator as on intestacy shall not take in any event, but the testator has only expressly provided for other persons to take in certain contingencies, the latter contingencies may sometimes be disregarded as conditions precedent, and the gift in the will may take effect as a vested interest in all events (f).

Except in such cases, however, the title of the heir-at-law or person claiming on a failure of the gift or for want of disposition by the testator is not excluded merely by reason that the testator has not contemplated all contingencies; such person takes on every event that the testator has not provided for (g).

(gift until she should receive a legacy); compare Re Akeroyd's Settlement, Roberts v. Akeroyd, [1893] 3 Ch. 363, C. A. (gift over on bankruptcy implied), distinguishing Re Tredwell, Jeffray v. Tredwell, [1891] 2 Ch. 640. The distinction in all these cases is between a limitation for a definite period with a gift over on some of the events defining that period, when the above rules may apply, and a limitation followed by an executory gift over on any collateral contingency, which is to determine the first estate sooner than it would otherwise be determined (Sheffield v. Orrery (Lord) (1745), 3 Atk. 282, 285; Walpole v. Laslett (1862), 1 New Rep. 180).

SECT. 7.

Conditional Gifts.Rule as to remainders.

1457. The principal rule as to real estate is the rule of law that a legal limitation (h) which in its inception can operate as a remainder shall be allowed to do so (i), and apart from statute (k) shall not operate as an executory devise. The court is unwilling to hold that the estate in fee is in abeyance (l).

1458. The gift may be vested, where it may take effect as a remainder and the contingencies described are those on which the preceding interests determine and the gift should come into possession (m). Thus, the words "in default of issue" or "in default of such issue" introducing a gift after an estate tail are considered and used as apt words for introducing a remainder, and not as words of contingency (n), and may be so even after gifts for life only to the issue (o); and the gift may take effect although issue has come into existence and failed (p).

Contingencies

determination of prior
interests.

Similarly, where real estate is devised to a person and his heirs or to a person generally when or if he shall attain a specified age, the circumstance that a prior estate to endure pending his attainment of that age has been given to some other person, either for the benefit of the subsequent devisee himself, whether generally or in a particular manner, as for his education and maintenance (q), or for the benefit of the prior devisee or other persons (r), is an indication that the attainment of that age is not the time when the estate is to vest, but is an event on the happening of which the estate, already vested, is either to come into possession or to be divested (s).

On the other hand, a devise, after a prior gift for life, to a child of the life tenant or other donee if attaining a specified age is not made vested merely by the fact that it is expressed to take effect "from and after" the death of the life tenant (t), although this expression may be of importance if there are other indications of such an intention (a).

Gift over.

1459. An inference that the gift is vested is drawn, in a suitable context (b), from the circumstance that the estate is given over in the event of the first devisee dying under the specified age with or without other contingencies, even where there is no express provision for the meantime (c). This is on the ground that the

(b) The rule is inapplicable where the context is unsuitable, as where there is an express direction as to vesting, or the specified age is an element in the description of the donee (*Russell v. court discovers an intention that the first devisee should take all that the testator has to give, except whatever interest the person claiming under the devise over is entitled to, which gives the first devisee the immediate interest subject to being divested under the gift over (d). There is no difference in this respect with regard to legal or equitable interests (e), or with regard to devises to individuals or to classes (f).

SMOY. 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

A similar inference has been made where the original gift was apparently contingent on surviving a life tenant, but there was a gift over if the donee should die in the lifetime of the life tenant without leaving issue (g). It is difficult to make such an inference where the gift over is contingent on an event which cannot happen until after the death of the first taker (h), or has no relation to the first taker's interest (i), or if the attainment of a specified age is part of the description of the donee, or otherwise the description of the donee itself contains a contingency; in such cases a gift in the interim or a gift over has no effect in making the gift vested (a). Particularly, there is a difference (b) between a gift to such a person as attains, or to such of a number of persons as attain, a specified over; and see Re Dennis (1903), 5 Ontario Law Reports, 46. Doe d. Dolley v. Ward (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 582, however, appears to be decided on the ground that by the form of the original gift the devise was vested at birth, with a postponed time of enjoyment (see p. 799, ante); and it was said that the devise over to the other children did not make such a distinction as to escape from the authority of Doe d. Rouke v. Nowell (1813), 1 M. & S. 327; see Doe d. Dolley v. Ward, supra, at p. 606. In Phipps v. Ackers (1842), 9 Cl. & Fin. 583, H. L., the question addressed to the judges omitted the words "without leaving issue of his body," so that the limitations submitted to them were similar to the limitations in Doe d. Hunt v. Moore (1811), 14 East, 601, which had been doubted in Phipps v. Ackers (1835), 3 Cl. & Fin. 702, H. L., per Lord Brougham, at pp. 715, 716; no importance appears to have been attached to the omitted words in the speeches in the House of Lords. These cases were cited with approval in *Egerton v. age (c), and a gift to all those persons at that age (d), or who attain that age (e); the latter forms of gift can much more easily be construed as vested, especially if they take effect as remainders.

1460. The rules applicable to real estate apply also to a fund, whether entirely composed of personal estate or a mixed fund, which is directed to be converted into real estate (f).

A trust for sale of real estate, and for payment of the proceeds to certain donees, ascertained without reference to the time or other features of the sale, where the sale is merely for the purpose of division, and for the convenience of the estate, does not make the sale a condition precedent to vesting of their interests (g).

(c) Such a devise was held contingent on attaining the specified age in limitations construed as operating as contingent remainders in Brackenbury v. Gibbons (1875), 2 Ch. D. 417; Symes v. Symes, [1896] 1 Ch. 272; White v. Summers, [1908] 2 Ch. 256; and in gifts operating as executory limitations in Re Finch, Abbiss v. Burney (1881), 17 Ch. (e) Such a gift vested at birth, subject to be divested on failure to attain the age in Riley v. Garnett (1849), 3 De G. & Sm. 629, explained in Re Finch, Abbiss v. Burney, supra, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 222, as decided on the ground that a power to grant leases during minorities had no meaning unless minors had an interest; Andrew v. Andrew (1875), 1 Ch. D. 410, C. A. (as to which case, see note (a), p. 808, ante); Muskett v. Eaton (1875), 1 Ch. D. 435, where a reference to children born in due time after the death of the tenant for life showed that the attainment of a specified age was not part of the description; see Re Finch, Abbiss v. Burney, supra. The rule of construction on which these cases were decided depends partly on the law as to contingent remainders, and partly on the principle that as to real estate the courts are unwilling to hold the fee to be in abeyance (Pearks v. Moseley (1880), 5 App. Cas. 714, per Lord SELBORNE, L.C., at p. 721). Even in case of a remainder, such words primâ facie make the gift contingent, and these cases have no application to wills where the limitations are not legal remainders (Festing v. Allen (1843), 12 M. & W. 279, 300, 301; Holmes v. Prescott (1864), 10 Jur. (N. S.) 607; Rhodes v. Whitehead, supra; Perceval v. Perceval (1870), L. R. 9 Eq. 386; Re Eddel's Trusts (1871), L. estate, including leaseholds, and so far as charged on such personal estate. Where the gift is given together with leaseholds or other personal estate, under a single description in terms such that according to the canons above stated there is a vested estate conferred in the freeholds, the interests in the leaseholds or other personal estate may also be considered as vested, although, according to the canons stated below, they would be regarded as contingent (k), but the rules of law as to contingent remainders in real estate do not prevent effect being given to the intention as to the personal estate (l).

Sect. 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

1462. In all cases of legacies given on any future event, whether certain to happen or not, the question of vesting is whether the gift is wholly dependent on that event (m), so that it must have happened before any part of the testator's bounty can attach to the legatee (n), or whether the time of payment only is postponed to that event; the legatee may take a vested interest at once subject to such postponed payment (o).

Distinction between vesting and payment.

1463. Where the gift is a simple gift at a future event, or from and after a future event, or is contained wholly in a direction to pay, or to divide or to transfer, at or from and after a future event, so that there is no gift except in the direction to pay or transfer, the vesting is prima facie postponed until that event happens; and consequently if the legatee dies before that event his representatives are prima facie not entitled to payment (p). Thus, a legacy to a named person at a certain definite future time, without more, is prima facie contingent, and he or his representatives take no interest if he dies before that time (q).

A gift, however, to a class upon a contingency does not prima facie render the contingency applicable to the description of the class (r).

1464. If the words of the gift express a distinction between the gift itself and the event denoting the time of payment, division, or transfer (s), and this time is the attainment by the donee of the age of twenty-one years (t) or other age (a), or is any other event which, assuming the requisite duration of life, must necessarily happen at a determinable time (b), then the gift is prima facie (c) not contingent in respect of that event (d). The personal representative of the donee is then entitled to the gift, even if the donee dies before attaining the specified age or before the named event but is prima facie not entitled to payment before the donee himself would have been so entitled (e). This presumption as to vesting does not arise where the gift is on an event, such as the marriage of the donee, which will not necessarily happen at all, however long the donee or other person concerned lives (f); in such a case, however, other indications as mentioned below may be present to show that the vesting is independent of the named event (g).

(d) This is the first rule in Stapleton v. Cheales (1711), Prec. Ch. 317; Tudor, L. C. Real Prop., 4th ed., pp. 438, 459; see accordingly Jackson v. Jackson (1748), 1 Ves. The rule arose in the ecclesiastical courts, and was adopted by courts of law and of equity as to personal legacies, but not as to real estate of legacies charged on real estate (Maddison v. Andrew 1747), 1 Ves. Sen. 58, 59; Mackell v. Winter (1797), 3 Ves. 536, per Lord LOUGHBOROUGH, L.C., at p. 543; and see p. 821, post.

NOTE 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

Even where the gift and direction to pay are distinct, the context may show that the gift is contingent (h). A mere direction for accumulation until payment, however, is not sufficient (i), and even an express contingency attached to payment may not be sufficient to make the vesting contingent (k).

1465. The context may also show that the gift is vested, even where there is no express distinction between the gift and a direction as to the time of payment. Thus, it may appear that the reason for the postponement of the gift is on account of prior interests given in the meantime, or on account of the nature of the property and the convenience of administration (l); in such a case the gift prima facie vests independently of the postponement of enjoyment (a).

A direction, however, for payment of the whole interest of the legacy to the donee in the meantime will entitle the personal representative to immediate payment on the death of the donee, even before the donee himself would have been entitled to payment (Cloberry and Lampen's Case (1877), 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 24; Anon. (1690), 2 Vern. 199; Fonnereau v. Fonnereau (1748), 1 Ves. Sen. 119; May v. Wood (1792), 3 Bro. C. C. 472, 474; Hanson v. Graham (1891), 6 Ves. 239; as to such gifts, see p. 814, post); but a mere direction to allow maintenance, not amounting to a gift of the interest, has not this effect (*Harrison v. SECT. 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

Postponement to a life estate.

Postponement until youngest attains specified age.

Gift of interim interest.

Accordingly, primâ facie no contingency is imported by the fact that the legacy is given after a life estate in the property given (b). Where a legacy is given to a donee contingently on attaining a specified age, the fact that the legacy is also postponed to a life estate primâ facie does not render it contingent on the donee surviving the tenant for life (c); while the fact that the interest is given to another person pending his attaining that age may be an indication of a vested gift (d).

A gift to a class of children when the youngest attains a specified age confers a vested interest on all who attain that age, whether they are living or dead at the time of payment (e), and primâ facie those who do not attain that age do not take vested interests (f), unless there are other matters in the will from which a contrary inference may be drawn (g). In the case of a similar gift to individuals, and not to a class, primâ facie they take vested interests although dying before the specified age (h).

whole interim interest of the fund to the donee (i) it is presumed, unless the context is to the contrary (k), that the testator meant a single immediate vested gift (l). In order to raise this inference the gift of interim income must be free from contingency (m), except in cases where the gift would be vested in every event but the named contingency causing postponement (n); and therefore it does not arise where the capital and income of the legacy are given in a single gift (o) so that the same contingency applies to them both.

(i) A postponed legacy may in certain cases carry interest from the death of the testator, but this may be independent of the question whether the legacy is vested or not; see, for example, Wynch v. Wynch (1778), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 433; Re Rouse's Estate (1852), 9 Hare, 649. "Perhaps the true principle of the cases is that where there is one gift of corpus and income as parts of a whole, a gift otherwise contingent will be vested, but that where there are separate gifts, one of capital and one of income, not necessarily going together, the gift will not be deemed vested" (*Brennan v. subject to annuities or life interests is immaterial; howsoever the capital given may be charged, if the income of that capital less the charges is given the rule is satisfied (p); but it is not sufficient that the dividends on property equal in amount to that which is the subject of gift should be directed to be paid to the legatee, where the severance of the property given is only to take place at the future time of payment (q); or that an annuity of amount equal to the interest on the sum given should be given to the donee pending the event, but not as interest on the capital (r).

contingent
applicable.

This presumption of vesting derivable from gifts of income fails if the context is to the contrary (s), but applies whatever the nature of the contingent event denoting the time of payment of the capital of the legacy (t).

Gift of interim maintenance.

1467. When provision is made for the maintenance of the legatee in the meantime, the question arises whether it is a distinct gift from the legacy in question, or is merely a direction as to the mode of application of the interest (a). If merely maintenance is given as a distinct gift, it has no effect in making the legacy vested (b).

individuals.

Where, therefore, the donee is an individual, or one of a group of persons taking as individuals and not as a class, the fact that the gift is to carry interest, and that the whole interest or income of the gift is directed to be applied for the maintenance, or in some other manner for the benefit, of the donee until the contingent event on which the legacy itself is given, is an indication (c) that vesting is independent of the contingency (d). (c) A gift of interim maintenance does not make vested a gift which is clearly contingent on the whole context (Butcher v. Leach (1843), 5 Beav. 392; Re Coleman, Henry v. Strong (1888), 39 Ch. D. 443, C. A.).

vesting is not necessarily excluded by the fact that the mode of application of the interest may come to an end before the specified event (e); in general, however, if there necessarily occurs an interval or gap which separates the gift of income from the capital, the latter gift is not vested (f) unless there are other indications to that effect (g).

1468. In the case of a gift to a class at a specified age, with a direction to apply each share of the whole interest for the maintenance or benefit of the corresponding member of the class, the whole of the class in general take vested interests irrespective of their attaining the age (h) even if trustees have a discretion as to the mode of application of such share of the interest (i); but this rule does not hold good where the gift for maintenance is not out of each share of the fund for the benefit of the corresponding member of the class, but is a general gift for maintenance of the whole class out of the whole undivided interest of the fund (k).

trustees shall pay the whole or such part of that interest as they think fit for maintenance of the donees^(l). A similar rule prevails as to gifts to a number of persons as a group, and not as a class, if the direction applies to their respective shares or interests^(m).

Even in a case where a gift to a class at a specified age is accompanied by a trust or direction to apply the income of the presumptive share of each member or so much of such income as the trustees think proper for his maintenance until payment, it is possible⁽ⁿ⁾ to draw the inference that the members take vested interests independently of attaining that age^(o), at all events if the context not only does not show the contrary^(p) but assists the inference^(q).

(l) Re Parker, Barker v. Barker (1880), 16 Ch. D. 44, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 46, followed in Re Williams, Williams v. Williams, [1907] 1 Ch. 180. In Re Sanderson's Trust (1857), 3 K. & J. 497, 507, a direction to apply the "whole or any part" of the income in maintenance was considered not discretionary, and therefore as coming within the ordinary rule (see p. 816, ante); and see Re Rouse's Estate (1852), 9 Hare, 649.

C., 18 L. J. (CH.) 485. The decision in Fox v. Fox, supra, has been the subject of much discussion. The rule as enunciated in Fox v. Fox, supra, per JESSEL, M.R., at pp. 290, 291, is as follows: "I hold that a gift contained in a direction to pay and divide amongst a class at a specific age, followed by a direction to apply the whole income for maintenance in the meantime, is vested, and not the less so because there is a discretion conferred on the trustees to apply less than the whole income for that purpose." It is pointed out in Wilson v. Knox (1884), 13 L. R. Ir. 349, that no such question arose for decision in Fox v. Fox, supra, since the gift of income was by reference to the presumptive shares of the donees. Though doubted in Deuar v. Brooke (1880), 14 Ch. D. 529, 532, Re Wintle, Tucker v. Wintle, [1896] 2 Ch. 711, 715, 719, and Re Martin, Tuke v. Gilbert (1887), 57 L. T. 471, 474 (see also Brennan v. Brennan, [1894] 1 I. R. 69, 73), the decision in Fox v. Fox, supra, was considered by LINDLEY, M.R., and JUNE, P., in Re Turney, Turney v. Turney, [1899] 2 Ch. 739, C. A., at pp. 747, 748, to be good sense and good law; and was followed, as laying down the rule in the text, supra, in Re Eichardt, Brebner v. O'Meara (1905), 25 New Zealand Law Reports, 374, and Re Levy, Cohen v. Cohen (1907), 7 New South Wales State Reports, 885; see, however, note (q), p. 819, post. A trust that at the discretion of the trustees a sufficient part of the income of the presumptive shares should be applied in maintenance was considered insufficient to render the gift of capital a vested gift in Vaudry v. Geddes (1830), 1 Russ. & M. 203, 207, where also there was an alternative trust for accumulation; Boreham v. Bignall (1850), 8 Hare, 131, where also the will contained an advancement clause relating to presumptive shares; Hardcastle v. Hardcastle (1862), 1 Hem. & M. 405, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 410. It appears that the difference in this respect between gifts to classes and gifts to named individuals lies in the ascertainment of the persons composing the class; the question seems to be whether the direction as to interest can be read as dividing the fund into as many shares as there are children born of their parents (as in Fox v. Fox, supra; see Re Mervin, Mervin v. Crossman, [1891] 3 Ch. 197, 201) as distinct from as many shares as there are children attaining the specified age (Bowyer v. West (1871), 24 L. T. 414); this determines the class.

(p) Thus, the inference is excluded where the class is clearly a contingent

(q) For note (q) see p. 819, post.

1470. A mere discretionary power in like terms is not sufficient (*) for this purpose, whether the donee is a class (s), an individual (t); or a group of persons taking not as a class (u), and whether there is (a) or is not (b) a direction to accumulate the income not so applied for the benefit of persons who ultimately attain a vested interest; and where the gift is a specific or general legacy, and interest is given for maintenance pending the donee arriving at a specified age, but under the other provisions of the will there is no possibility of the separation of the subject-matter of the gift from the rest of the testator's estate, the inference is that the gift remains contingent (c).

1471. The circumstance that the testator has expressly or impliedly directed the legacy fund immediately or on any intermediate event to be severed for the purpose of the gift from his general estate is also prima facie sufficient to show that the further postponement of enjoyment is not for the purpose of making the gift contingent (d). It is a sufficient separation, for this purpose, that the trustees must properly, as a matter of book-keeping or physically, set apart the property as being property to which no class, with the specified age forming part of the description of the class (Re Ricketts, Ricketts v. Ricketts (1910), 103 L. T. 278; Re Hume, Public Trustee v. Mabey, [1912] 1 Ch. 693).

(g) In Fox v. Fox (1873), L. R. 19 Eq. 286, the construction in favour of vesting was also indicated by a gift over; see p. 820, post.

(r) In Re Turney, Turney v. Turney, [1899] 2 Ch. 739, C. A., however, LINDLEY, M.R., at p. 749, considered that a power of maintenance out of the income of the expectant share of a member of the class, pointed in the direction of vesting; and in Fox v. Fox, supra, JESSEL, M.R., at p. 290, treated the trust in that case as a power.

one but the donee has any right to look, subject if necessary to the right to resort to such property to satisfy the testator's debts (e).

1472. The mere circumstance of a gift of property being given over to another donee on a certain contingency does not, of itself and without more, prevent the first gift vesting in the meantime, although it may be called in aid of other circumstances for that purpose (f); nor, prima facie, does it vest the property in the first donee on the failure of that contingency irrespective of other contingencies attached to the original gift (g).

Failure to attain specified age.

1473. If a gift is made to an individual donee in terms which prima facie make it contingent on the donee attaining a specified age, and a gift over is made in the event of the donee failing to attain that age, the gift over is an additional reason for considering the original gift as contingent (h); but where there are indications in favour of the original gift being vested independently of the specified age, a mere gift over in similar terms does not of itself prevent the vesting (i); and if the original gift is to a class, and the gift over refers to the shares of those dying under that age, the inference is that the original gift is vested (k).

In the case of a gift to a class, the gift over may show that a person not attaining the specified age is nevertheless to take, or to be treated as taking, a share as a member of the class, and that such share is given over in the specified events; accordingly the Ridgway* (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 271, the question was not the vesting of the gift, but the application of the intermediate income. A gift over on death under the specified age without issue may similarly not prevent vesting (Bland v. Williams, supra; Harrison v. Grimwood (1849), 12 Beav. 193; see p. 806, ante).

(k) If the gift over is to a stranger and not to the other members of the class, the inference is that the person not attaining the specified age is nevertheless to take a share as a member of the class (see the text, infra); and if the gift over is an accruer clause in favour of the other members of the class, the inference is the same, in order that the accruer clause may not be useless (Re Edmondson's Estate (1868), L. R. 5 Eq. 389; Re Gunning's Estate, supra).

attainment of the specified age is not then a condition precedent to vesting (l).

SECT. 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

Gift over on parent's death without issue.

1474. Where a gift is made to the children generally of a named person at a specified age (and therefore prima facie contingently on attaining that age), a gift over on the parent dying without issue does not of itself render the gift vested without regard to the attainment of that age (m); but in cases of gifts to a class of children surviving their parent at such an age, a similar gift over has in some cases given rise to the inference that the attainment of that age was not a condition precedent (n).

(iv.) Canons Applicable to Legacies Charged on Real Estate.

1475. Legacies, so far as they are charged on real estate, prima facie (o) do not vest until the time fixed for payment (p), and fail if the donee dies before that time, even though interest is given in the meantime (q), unless the payment is clearly postponed not for reasons personal to the donee, but for the benefit of the estate (r), 1476. Where legacies are charged both on real and on personal estate, then primâ facie, according to the ordinary rule in administration of estates (a), the personal estate is applied first towards payment, and the real estate only in aid of it. The vesting, then, of the legacies, so far as the personal estate is applied towards payment, is governed by the ordinary rules (b) applying to bequests of pure personal estate alone (c); and so far as it is necessary to resort to the real estate, the vesting is governed by the rules (d) applying to legacies charged on real estate alone (e). Even where the legatee dies before the time of payment, therefore, his representatives are entitled, provided that there is a vested interest so far as the personal estate is concerned, and that the personal estate is sufficient (f).

SUB-SECT. 3. — Divesting.

Divesting in
general.

1477. The court in a doubtful case (g) leans against the divesting of vested interests (h), and favours that construction which leads to the vesting indefeasibly of the property as early as possible (i). In general, therefore, subject to the intention shown by the will as a whole (k), divesting conditions are construed strictly (l); and where there is a prior vested gift, and then a clause divesting the gift in an express contingency, the court does not hold the gift divested unless the precise contingency referred to occurs, and does not introduce other contingencies unless the context requires that course (m).

SECT. 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

1478. Where there is a gift to a named person for life, and after his death to his children either generally or on attaining any age, or other event (n) in terms which give the children a vested absolute interest independently of whether the children survive their parent or not (o), followed by a gift over if the parent dies "without leaving children," these words are construed so as not to destroy any prior vested interest (p), and read as "without having children" (q), or "without having had children" (r), or

The principle applies to the divesting not only of vested estates, but of contingent estates (ibid.). Accordingly, in cases of gifts to children of a named parent, followed by a gift over if all the children die in the lifetime of their parent, where some but not all survive their parent, nevertheless all take (Bromhead v. Hunt (1821), 2 Jac. & W. 459; Gordon v. Hope (1849), 3 De G. & Sm. 351 (settlement); *Templeman v. (n) As in cases where the interest of the children is to vest at birth (Treharne v. Layton (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 459, Ex. Ch.; Re Bradbury, Wing v. Bradbury (1904), 73 L. J. Strode* (1843), 8 Jur. 14), or when the youngest attains twenty-one years (Kennedy v. Sedgwick (1857), 3 K. & J. 540), or any similar event, if only the vesting is without reference to the surviving of the parent (Barkworth v. Barkworth (1906), 75 L. J. (o) The rule is inapplicable, therefore, where the interests of the children are contingent on their surviving their parents (Bythessea v. Bythessea (1854), 23 L. J. (CH.) 1004, C. A.; Sheffield v. Kennett (1859), 4 De G. & J. 593, C. A.; Re Watson's Trusts (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 36, where Bryden v. Willett (1869), L. R. 7 Eq. 472, is criticised; and see *Pride v. D. 189; Barkworth v. Barkworth, supra); and see Re Simmons, Dennison v. Orman (1903), 87 L. T. 594 (gift over held not intended to displace appointment under a power).

"without leaving children who have attained vested interests" (s), according to the context. The rule is not confined to a case in which the tenant for life stands in loco parentis to the donee in remainder, but extends to a case in which the tenant for life is a complete stranger (t), and, it seems, to a case in which the children mentioned in the gift over take no interest, but there is an interest in their parent (u), or in anyone else (w), independent of the children surviving their parent, and where the result of reading the words in their ordinary sense would be to divest interests which, it is inferred, the testator intended to remain vested. This rule is not affected by the circumstances that the testator knew of the existence of a child of the named person, and that such knowledge appears on the face of the will itself (a); but it is inapplicable where the context shows that the prior vested interests were intended to be destroyed in accordance with the plain meaning of the words (b), or where the subject-matter of the gift is an annuity bequeathed so as to involve the notion of personal enjoyment by each of the successive donees (c).

Change of "or" into
"and."

1479. If there is a devise to a named person in fee simple (d) or a bequest to a named person absolutely (e), with a gift over in either case if he die without children or under the age of twenty-one years to other donees, the word "or" is read "and," and the gift over does not take effect unless both events happen. This rule of construction depends on a presumed intention of the testator to benefit the children of the devisee directly or indirectly, an intention which would be defeated if the devisee died under twenty-one leaving children, and the word "or" was construed disjunctively (f). The alteration is made although the sentence as altered contains a condition repugnant to the character of the estate given (g). A similar rule holds good as to gifts over if the donee in question dies before a life tenant under a previous gift or without issue (h).

Eliz. 525; and note (e), p. 825, post.

(e) The rule applies both to real and to personal estate (Wright v. Marson, [1895] W. N. 148; Weddell v. Mundy (1801), 6 Ves. 341; Mytton v. Boodie (1834), 6 Sim. 457).

This canon of construction is also applicable where the prior devise or bequest is contingent on the donee leaving issue (i) or on his attaining majority (k), if he takes absolutely.

Where, however, a prior donee takes for life only, and his issue are unprovided for or take express absolute interests, and there is a similar gift over, this alteration cannot be adopted so as to defeat the interests of subsequent takers (l). Where a prior donee takes in tail (m), or takes for life only with remainder to his issue as purchasers in tail (n), a gift over on his death under age or on the failure of his issue may be read without alteration of the "or" into "and"; but even in this case a death under the specified age does not in general carry the estate over, unless there is also a failure of issue, since the gift over would not be read so as to defeat any issue in tail (o); while a death without issue, although after attaining

Cas. 61, 80, by Lord CRANWORTH, L.C., who, however, approved of the rule as being an established rule. According to the structure of the sentence, if the word "without" is used, the gift over on a composite event may be accurately expressed in the form containing the word "or" (Stretton v. Fitzgerald (1889), 23 L. R. Ir. 466, per FITZGIBBON, L.J., at pp. 472, 473); in such a case it is not necessary to alter the words, i.e., the gift over in the text may be accurately expressed as on death "without having any issue attaining twenty-one."

(g) As, for instance, gifts over on the donee dying without issue or intestate (Incorporated Society v. Richards (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 258, 283; Green v. Harvey (1842), 1 Hare, 428; Greates v. Pearson, supra. The effect, so far as death under age is concerned, is therefore the same as if "or" were read "and"; compare Monkhouse v. Monkhouse (1829), 3 Sim. 119, 126 (gift over on death or want of issue construed as on death and want of issue).

that age, may carry the estate over by way of remainder (p) or otherwise.

On the same principle (q), or to avoid inconsistency (r), where a prior gift is absolute, or contingent on attaining a specified age, or on marriage, or on a specified age or marriage as alternative events, a gift over in any of these cases on the death of the donee before attaining that age or marriage is read as if "or" were "and."

In cases where the interest of a donee is postponed to a life interest, but is contingent only on his attaining a certain age, and not on his surviving the life tenant, a gift over on his death before the life tenant or under the specified age is construed as if "or" were "and" (s).

1480. In general, the court is unwilling to change the conjunction "and" into "or" in a gift over on several events connected by "and," where the words may have their ordinary sense, since the effect would be to divest the prior gift in events other than the compound event which the testator has provided for (t). Thus, after a gift to a donee absolutely (u), or in tail (a), or for life with remainder to the children of the tenant for life (b), a gift over on the donee dying under twenty-one and without issue is read in its ordinary sense, and is not read as if "and" were "or" merely for the possible benefit of the issue.

"And" may, however, be construed "or" where one member of the sentence includes the other, so that by construing the words literally one member of the sentence would be rendered unnecessary, and the change is made in order to give effect to each member of the sentence (c). The alteration is not, however, made if by giving to that member of the sentence some less usual meaning effect can be given to every word (d). Thus, if after a gift to a person absolutely or for life and afterwards to his children there is a gift over on his death "unmarried and without issue," it can be read as if "and" were "or" in cases where "unmarried" is necessarily given its ordinary meaning of "never having been married" (e); but as a rule, if in such a gift over "unmarried" can be given the meaning "without leaving a spouse" (f), so as to give effect to all the words without altering the conjunctions, this construction is adopted rather than that the words should be altered (g).

It is an additional objection to the change of "and" into "or" that any part of the sentence becomes inoperative (h).

1481. If there is a gift after a life estate to a number of persons in equal shares or alternatively to such of them as survive the life tenant, the survivorship clause is primâ facie a divesting clause only, and if none of the donees survive the life tenant, their representatives take in equal shares (i). A similar rule applies in other cases where after a gift to a number of persons a gift in any contingency to the survivor of them is construed as conditional on his surviving the tenant for life or some specified event (k). Time of operation.

Gift over in the event of death.

this rule is not adopted where in the context of the will a gift to the survivor of a number of persons is construed as referring to survivorship inter se and not as conditional on his surviving the life tenant; in such a case the longest liver takes the gift, although all die in the lifetime of the life tenant (l); nor does the rule operate where the condition as to surviving the life tenant applies to the original gift (m).

The time of operation of a divesting provision may be limited by the context (n), for example, by a direction for payment, transfer or conveyance to the donee, or for the doing of any such act on any specified event; the court considers that the trustees or executors could not conveniently obey such a direction if divesting were intended to take place after that event (o).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Particular Conditions.

(i.) In case of Death, simply, as a Contingency.

1482. A gift over of property, given to a person absolutely, in the event of his death is construed as a gift over in the event of his death before the period of distribution or vesting, unless some other period is indicated by the context (p).

If, therefore, the gift is immediate, and there is a gift over in case of the donee's death, as a contingency, the gift over primâ facie takes effect only in the case of the donee dying in the lifetime of the testator, as an alternative gift (q), and if the gift is postponed

Davies* (1854), 23 L. J. (C. P.) 169. Subject to such a context, the operation of a divesting clause operates whenever the contingency happens on which it is to take effect see, for example, Witham v. Witham (1861), 3 De G. F. & J. 758. As to particular gifts over, see the text, infra.

Burdett*, supra, per Lord CAIRNS, L.C., at p. 395. The rule is based on the ground that the event of death is so inevitable that it cannot be deemed a contingency, and therefore the testator could not have intended merely to provide for the case of the donee dying at any time. It is also based on the presumption in favour of vesting (Home v. Pillans (1833), 2 My. & Cr. 15, 20, 21).

to a life estate, the gift over prima facie takes effect only on a death before the tenant for life, as an alternative gift (r); or, if the context requires, the gift over may be construed as referring to death before vesting (s).

SMOT. 7.
Conditional Gifts.

It may be, however, that the context of the will shows that the first donee takes not an absolute interest, but a life interest only, or that the gift in case of death is to take effect not as a contingent gift, but by way of succession in any event; the second donee then takes on the death of the first donee at any time (t).

When life interest only created.

Generally, death is regarded as a contingent event only from necessity, and if the words import no other contingency (u).

1483. In a gift to one donee indefinitely followed by a gift "at the death," or "after the death" of that donee, the gift over prima facie takes effect at death, not as on a contingent event, but by way of succession, and the first donee takes a life estate only (v).

Gift at the death of prior donee.

(ii.) On Death with Other Contingencies.

1484. In cases where the gift over is on death coupled with some other contingency, for example, on the death of the donee without leaving issue, or without leaving issue living at the time of his death, then prima facie the gift over takes effect on the death of the donee at any time (a), and not merely on his death before the time of distribution, if the rest of the contingency is fulfilled at his death (b).

A gift to one person in the event of death of another is only treated as a gift in remainder or succession where the first taker takes for life only (Penny v. Commissioner for Railways, supra, per Lord LINDLEY, at p. 635). There is no general rule, however, that a prior gift is always cut down to a life interest by a gift over "after the death" of the first legatee (Re Monck (Lady), Monck v. Croker, [1900] 1 I. R. 56, 66).

No difference is made by the fact that the donees under the gift over are the children of the first taker (c), and the rule is the same as to real and as to personal estate (d), and whether there is a previous life estate (e) or not (f).

On the context of the will, however, the contingency may be confined to a death during the lifetime of a tenant for life (g), or during the life of the testator (h), or before distribution or some other event (i). In particular, it may appear that the gift over is not an executory limitation defeating the prior gift at any time, but a substitutional gift, and the death with a contingency is confined to the period within which substitution takes place (k), or there may be alternative gifts over, whether the death takes place with or without a failure of issue or other contingent event (l).

The ratio decidendi of these cases, as being an addition of all the contingencies so as to make a certainty, was dissented from in Cooper v. Cooper (1855), 1 K. & J. 858, 602; *Bowers v. postponed, at a year from the death of the testator (j), and in other cases at the death of the tenant for life or other period of distribution (g).

1486. A gift over on the death of a donee before the gift becomes due or payable is valid, and may take effect on the death of the donee in the life of the testator (h). The time referred to depends in general upon the period of distribution contemplated by the will (i), but is susceptible of a variety of interpretations according to the context (k). In a gift to children, where the time for payment is after a life estate on their attaining majority or other qualification, their shares primâ facie become vested when they are wanted (for example, in the case of sons at the age of twenty-one, and in the case of daughters at twenty-one or marriage), and the gift is not read as making the provision for a child contingent on surviving both or either of its parents unless the intention is clearly so expressed (l); a gift over on death before the gift becomes payable is confined to a death before attaining the majority or other qualification (m).

(m) "Payable" is construed "vested" in such a case; accordingly the share of a child who attains majority and dies in the lifetime of his parent is not divested (Emminger v. Rolfe (1750), 1 Ves. Sen. 208; Cholmondeley v. Meyrick (1758), 1 Eden, 77; Salisbury (Earl) v. Lambe (1759), 1 Eden, 435; Hope v. Clifden (Lord) (1801), 6 Ves. 498; Willis v. Willis (1796), 3 Ves. 5; *Schenk v. 1488. A gift over on the prior donee's death before attaining a vested interest prima facie refers to death before vesting in the technical sense (b), but if the context requires may refer to death before taking possession (c), or before having the right to possession (d).

The case of Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests v. Cotter (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 498, followed in Henderson v. Kennicot (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 492, was said in Re Maunder, Maunder v. Maunder, supra, at p. 870, to be founded on Doe d. Long v. Prigg (1828), 8 B. & C. 321, which was disapproved on other grounds in Wordsworth v. Wood (1847), 1 H. L. Cas. 129, 154, H. L., and in Re Gregson's Trust Estate (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 428, C. A. A gift over on death before being "entitled in possession" is, in a context requiring it, capable of being construed "entitled in interest" (Re Yates's Trusts (1851), 16 Jur. 78).

(remainder in fee simple); and see Re Arnold's Estate (1863), 33 Beav. 163, 173, on the same will. (f) The statutory provision has been applied to gifts on death "without leaving male issue" (Re Edwards, Edwards v. Edwards, [1894] 3 Ch. 644, following Upton v. Hardman (1874), 9 I. R. failure of issue of any person in his lifetime or at the time of his death, or an indefinite failure of his issue, are prima facie construed to mean a want or failure of issue in the lifetime or at the time of the death of such person, and not an indefinite failure of issue (g).

1490. A contrary intention excluding the statutory rule may be shown by the fact that the person whose failure of issue is spoken of has a prior estate tail, or that a preceding gift is, without any implication arising from the words in question (h), a limitation of an estate tail to that person or issue (i); or otherwise, generally, by the context of the will (k).

1491. This statutory presumption, further, does not apply to cases where such words import if no issue described in a preceding gift shall be born, or if there shall be no issue who shall live to attain the age or otherwise answer the description required for obtaining a vested estate by a preceding gift to such issue (l).

(1898), 29 Ontario Reports, 402; Re Ross (1901), 1 State Reports, New South Wales (Equity), 1; see, however, Dodds v. Dodds (1860), 10 I. Ch. R. 476). It has been suggested (Hawkins, Wills, 1st ed., p. 177; 2nd ed., p. 256; Shand v. Robinson (1898), 19 New South Wales Reports (Equity), 85, 88) that the statutory provision has no application to words such as "in default of issue" or "on failure of issue," not containing, in themselves or by inference from the context, any reference to the death of the person failure of whose issue is spoken of; but for the contrary view see Neville v. Thacker (1888), 23 L. R. Ir. 344, 357; and see Green v. Green (1849), 3 De G. & Sm. 480, where the contrary appears to be assumed. The fact that the provision contemplates words which may import a failure of issue in the lifetime of the named person appears to be inconsistent with the suggestion. In Morris v. Morris (1853), 17 Beav. 198, ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 202, was of opinion that the provision also did not apply to cases where the words referring to dying without issue were combined with other words, such as "dying under twenty-one," which had been the subject of judicial decision.

F. & J. 128, per Lord CAMPBELL, L.C., at p. 130; for an example of such a contrary intention, see Fay v. Fay (1880), 5 L. R. Ir. 274.

(k) Green v. Green, supra; Green v. Giles (1855), 5 I. Ch. R. 25; Neville v. Thacker, supra; Weldon v. Weldon, [1911] 1 I. R. 177, C. A.

(l) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 29; Re Bence, Smith v. Bence, [1891] 3 Ch. 242, 249, C. A. Thus, where after gifts to particular descriptions of issue, the gift over is "in default of such issue," the word "such," cannot, as a general rule, be rejected (Staines v. Maddock (1728), 3 Bro. Parl. Cas. 108; Denne d. Briddon v. Page (1783), 11 East, 803, n.; Hop v. Coventry (Earl) (1789), 3 Term Rep. 83; Doe d. Comberbach v. Perryn (1789), 3 Term Rep. 484; Goodtill d. Sweet v. Herring (1801), 1 East, 264; E. v. Stafford (Marquis) (1806), 7 East, 521; Foster v. Romney (Lord) (1809), 11 East, 594; Ryan v. Cowley (1835), 1 L. & G. temp. Sugd. 7; Boydell v. Golightly, Boydell v. Stanton, Boydell v. Morland (1844), 14 Sin. 327, 344; Ashburner v. Wilson (1850), 17 Sin. 204; Bridger v. Ramsey (1853), 19 Hare, 820); but where the particular descriptions of issue are to take in tail, especially if their estates are shown to be estates tail to each of them successively, the words "such issue" may be explained to mean their issue, so that the subsequent limitations take effect as remainders (Lewis d. Ormond v. Waters (1805), 6 East, 336; Biddulph v.

Thus, words referring to failure of issue of a person in a gift over following a devise to the children of such person, or other special class of his issue, not being a contingent class, either in fee simple or in fee tail, primâ facie (m) means in default of such children, or other special class of issue, and the gift takes effect only on failure of the previous gifts (n).

A similar rule holds good in cases of bequests of personalty or of a mixed fund, where the prior bequest is an absolute bequest to children or other special class of issue, not being a contingent class (o).

1492. It is more difficult, though not impossible (p), to refer the issue to those taking under the prior gifts where the prior limitation is on contingent events (q), or is to a contingent class, as to sons attaining twenty-one or surviving a life tenant, so that there may be issue who may not take under it (r), or where the prior limitation is to a definite number of the children (s), or if the issue taking under previous gifts take for life only (a).

Similarly, where the gift over is in default of issue "as aforesaid," in like cases (Malcolm v. Taylor (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 416; Walker v. Petchell (1845), 1 C. B. 652). As to cases of implied reference to previous gifts, see the text, infra.

1493. In cases where there is a third period (other than an indefinitely distant time or the death of the person) to which the failure of issue may refer (for example, the death of any other person), the statutory presumption does no more than exclude the construction which gives an indefinitely distant failure of issue (b).

1494. In cases not within the above statutory rule (c) the meaning of such words, with certain exceptions (d), whether the gift is of real estate (e) or personal estate (f), or both together (g), imports an indefinite failure of issue at any time however remote (h), unless the context of the will (i) or the nature of the gift shows

(h) As to the possible objection as regards remoteness in such cases, see title PERPETUITIES, Vol. XXII., p. 307, note (k).

(i) As, for instance, where the issue is referred to as surviving a living person (Baker v. Lucas (1828), 1 Moll. 481; Gee v. Liddell (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 341), or where by the context "issue" means "children" (Doe d. Lyde v. Lyde (1787), 1 Term Rep. 593; Carter v. Bentall (1840), 2 Beav. 551; Bryan v. Manson (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 737). Similarly, if the gift over is directed to take effect "at the death" of the ancestor, a prior donee under the will, this is some indication, though not conclusive (Wadler v. Drew (1722), Com. 373; Doe d. Cock v. Cooper (1801), 1 East, 229 (real estate); Theobridge v. Kilburne (1750), 2 Ves. Sen. 233. 236 (personal estate)), that the failure of issue is confined to the death of the prior donee (Pembury v. Elkin (1719), 1 P. Wms. 563; Trotter v. Oswald (1787), 1 Cox, 317; Wilkinson v. South (1798), 7 Term Rep. 555; an intention to the contrary (k). Thus, a reference to dying without issue in the lifetime of a named person extends to the event of death and failure of issue both happening in the lifetime of that person (l).

1495. The following are recognised exceptions or cases where rules have been adopted as to wills not subject to the statutory rule above stated:—

(1) A gift on a death "without leaving issue" is, where the subject-matter is personal estate, primâ facie confined to a failure of issue at death (m); but, where the subject-matter is real estate, the gift primâ facie (n) extends to an indefinite failure of issue (o);

SECT. 7.
Conditional Gifts.

Rules applicable.

(1) Gift of realty and personalty on death without leaving issue.

Gawler v. Cadby (1821), Jac. 346, 348; Rackstraw v. Vile (1823), 1 Sim. & St. 604, following Doe d. King v. Frost (1820), 3 B. & Ald. 546 (observed on, Lewis, Law of Perpetuity, pp. 234, 235); Ex parte Davies (1851), 2 Sim. (N. S.) 114. As to the use of the word "then," see Pye v. Linwood (1842), 6 Jur. 618; Campbell v. Harding (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 390, 410. In general, if the gift over could not reasonably be meant to depend on a general failure of issue, the inference is that a failure at the death of the named ancestor is intended (Ex Rye's Settlement (1852), 10 Haro. 106, 111).

(k) King v. Withers (1735), Cas. temp. Talb. 117, 121; Campbell v. Harding (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 390, 406 ("with reference either to the subject-matter of the gift, or the extent of interest given to the devisee or legatee over"). Thus, in cases where the property is a leasehold for lives, the failure must occur within the lives of the cestuis que vie (Low v. Burron (1734), 3 P. Wms. 262; Campbell v. Harding, supra, at p. 406); but where the leasehold is renewable for ever, the effect in a case under the law prior to the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), is that the failure may be indefinitely remote; in such cases an estate in quasi-entail is created (Croly v. Croly (1825), Batt. 1; Manning v. Moore (1832), Alc. & N. 96; Lee v. Flinn (1833), Alc. & N. 418). The failure of issue is not restricted to any period, however, merely because the subject-matter of the gift is a copyhold in a manor in which there is no custom to entail, so that any intention inferred in favour of the issue cannot directly take effect (Doe d. Blesard v. Simpson (1842), 3 Scott (N. R.), 774, Ex. Ch., affirming Doe d. Simpson v. Simpson (1838), 5 Scott, 770).

Conditional
Gifts.

(2) Gift of property in possession on failure of testator's own issue.

(3) Gift of property in remainder on failure of issue taking under prior estates.

(4) Personal provisions on failure of issue.

where the real estate and personal estate are comprised in the same gift, the words are construed differently, according to the subject-matter (p).

(2) A gift of property to which the testator is entitled in possession, to take effect on failure of his own issue, not preceded by any other gift, is not a future gift, but is a gift in possession at the testator's death, in the event of there being at that time a failure of his issue (q).

(3) Where the testator under the limitations of another instrument is entitled in remainder or reversion on failure of the issue, or the issue male or female of any person, and the testator makes a gift of the property, not preceded by any other limitation, on failure of that issue these words do not make the gift a future gift, but are merely a description of the testator's interest (r). The question in such cases is whether the issue referred to in the will is the same as or is different from the issue inheritable under the other instrument (s).

(4) Where the court finds an intention that the persons entitled under the gift over are to enjoy the benefits of their gift as a personal provision during their lives, and are not merely to take interests which are not vested in possession though vested in right, this fact leads to the inference that the failure of issue is confined to the lives of those persons (t).

Daintry* (1794), 6 Term Rep. 307; but his criticisms have been disapproved (Crooke v. De Vandes (1802), 4 Ves. 197, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 203; Ellon v. Eason (1817), 19 Ves. 73, per GRANT, M.R., at p. 79; and see Doe d. Cadogan v. Ewart (1838), 7 Ad. & El. 636, 655—660).

(t) As, for instance, where the gift over provides for a charge of a legacy, intended as a personal provision (Nichols v. Hooper (1712), 1 P. Wms. 198; Doe d. Smith v. Webber (1818), 1 B. & Ald. 713, 721; the mere fact of a legacy given on failure of issue is insufficient; see Doe d. Todd v. Duesbury (1841), 8 M. & W. 514), or where the gift over is to such of a number of named or described persons as are living at the time of failure (Murray v. Addenbrook (1830), 4 Russ. 407, 419; Greenwood v. Verdan (1853), 1 K. & J. 74, 81). The inference also arises where the gift over is to the survivors of the persons, failure of whose issue is spoken of, in cases where "survivors" is used in its ordinary sense, of surviving the failure of issue (Hughes v. Sayer (1718), 1 P. Wms. 534; Ranelagh v. Ranelagh (1834), 2 My. & K. 441, 448; Turner v. Frampton (1845), 2 Coll. 331; Westwood v. Southey (1852), 2 Sim. (N. S.) 192, 201; and see *Massey v. 1496. A devise over on death without having or leaving an heir or male heir or heirs of the body (c) primâ facie (d) refers to a failure of such heirs at any time (e).

1497. A devise over of real estate on a death without children, either after a prior gift in fee or generally without words of limitation, may be construed, in order not to disappoint more remote generations of issue, as taking effect on death and failure of issue, either indefinitely (f) or within a limited time, for example, before the death of the named ancestor (g), according to the context.

A similar gift over of personal estate primâ facie refers to a failure of children (h) at the death of the named parent (i).

Jac. 695), or "surviving stirps," or "other"; see pp. 726, 727, ante. So, too, where the only interest taken under the gift over is an estate for life, or succession of estates for lives, it can be inferred that the failure of issue is confined to the lives of the donees under the gift over (Trafford v. Boehm (1746), 3 Atk. 440, 449; Roe d. Sheers v. Jeffery (1798), 7 Term Rep. 589, where the failure was said to be confined to the life of the prior donee; but see Lepine v. Ferard (1831), 2 Russ. & M. 378, per Lord BROUGHAM, at p. 388). This is not the case, however, where life interests are not the only interests arising under the gift over; the mere fact that the next interest under the gift over is for life is insufficient (Boehm v. Clarke (1804), 9 Ves. 580, 582; Barlow v. Saller (1810), 17 Ves. 479, 482; Doe d. Jones v. Owens (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 318, 320, 321; Lewis, Law of Perpetuity, pp. 212—217).

SECT. 7.
Conditional
Gifts.

A gift over on death "without having children" is construed as if on death "without having had children," and fails to take effect if the parent has any child, though no such child survives him (k).

(iv.) Forfeiture on Alienation.

Object of
clauses.

1498. In the case of a life or other interest given subject to a forfeiture clause, on bankruptcy or alienation (l) or on similar events, such a clause is construed with reference to the known object of such clauses, namely, to preserve the life or other interest and nothing else (m); it may be, however, in some cases that words are used which compel the court to hold that in the circumstances a forfeiture has been incurred, though, apart from the forfeiture clause, the interest has been preserved (n).

Effect of such clauses.

1499. The burden of proof lies on those who insist that forfeiture has taken place (o). The effect of such a clause in general depends on the nature of the event on which forfeiture is to take place, for example, as regards the donee, whether a definite act on his part alone is required (p), or whether the clause goes further and

(l) As to what interests can validly be made subject to such forfeiture clauses, see titles GIFTS, Vol. XIV., p. 422; PERSONAL PROPERTY, Vol. XXII., pp. 410 et seq. As to the construction of forfeiture clauses with respect to references to bankruptcy, see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., pp. 146, 148 et seq.; and as to the effect of such a clause with reference to a bankruptcy in the life of the testator, see ibid., p. 92.

(p) Thus, where there is a forfeiture on alienation by the donee, no forfeiture is caused by an act done by other persons against the will of the donee, such as a charging order (Re Kelly, West v. Turner (1888), 59 L. T. 492), or appointment of a receiver (Campbell v. Campbell (1895), 72 L. T. 294), or sale in proceedings against the donee by other persons (*E. v. Forfeiture clauses on alienation prima facie refer to alienation by way of anticipation, and do not, unless so expressed (b), refer to dispositions of income already accrued due or already vested in the donee (c). 8 Term Rep. 57, 61. A clause of forfeiture on alienation only is not operative on a mere attempt to assign, or on an assignment which by reason of a restraint on anticipation is nugatory (Re Wormald, Frank v. Museen (1890), 43 Ch. D. 630; Re Adamson, Public Trustee v. Billing (1913), 108 L. T. 179). As regards conditions of forfeiture on an attempt to assign, see *Wilkinson v. (v.) Hotspot etc.

of prior
"advances."

1500. A hotspot clause (e) directing past advances or other sums or property to be brought into account is construed so as to give effect to the whole will (f), and, as in the case of other divesting provisions (g), is in general construed strictly (h). Such a clause is not, of itself, a release from the personal liability, if any, of the donees to repay such advances (i). The presumptions, in the absence of special context (k), are that the advances are to be brought into account at the time fixed by the will for distribution (l)

the donee of the right to receive the income). If a doubt arises whether a document of alienation is intended to deal with income already accrued due or to deal with future income, the court favours the construction which prevents it causing a forfeiture (Cox v. Bockett (1865), 35 Beav. 48 (security for debt which was not proved to exceed the arrears due to charger); Durran v. Durran (1905), 91 L. T. 819, 820, C. A.).

(d) Avison v. Holmes, Penny v. Avison (1861), 1 John. & H. 530; Croft v. Lumley (1858), 6 H. L. Cas. 672 (covenant in lease); Re Swannell, Morrice v. Swannell (1909), 101 L. T. 76; Smith v. Perpetual Trustee Co., Ltd. (1910), 11 Commonwealth Law Reports, 148. A power of attorney given for value, as a colourable assignment, or for the express purpose of passing the property to a creditor, may cause forfeiture (Doe d. Mitkinson v. Carter (1799), 8 Term Rep. 300; Doe d. Norfolk (Duke) v. Hawke (1802), 2 East. 481; Wilkinson v. Wilkinson (1818), 2 Swan. 515; Oldham v. Oldham (1866), 3 Eq. 404).

(e) As to the construction of hotspot clauses relating to future advances and interests appointed under a power of appointment, in cases of settlements made by wills, see title SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., p. 574. The object of such a clause is, in general, to produce equality as between the donees, taking into consideration past gifts; as to the effect of such clauses generally, see Fox v. Fox (1870), L. R. 11 Eq. 142 (effect as notional increase of testator's estate); Smith v. Crabtree (1877), 6 Ch. D. 591 (exclusion of set-off of debt against specific legacy); Wheeler v. Humphreys, [1898] A. C. 506.

(f) Brocklehurst v. Flint (1852), 16 Beav. 100; Stares v. Penton (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 40, where the clause ceased to operate after one member of the class became entitled to payment; Stewart v. Stewart (1880), 15 Ch. D. 539. A hotspot clause may fail as conditional on a circumstance which has not come to pass (Nugee v. Chapman (No. 1) (1860), 29 Beav. 288).

(g) As to divesting provisions generally, see pp. 822 et seq., ante.

(h) Thus, even where the person directed to account has obtained a benefit, the clause is not extended to advances to persons other than those contemplated by the clause (M'Clure v. Evans (1861), 29 Beav. 422 (husband of legatee); and as to advances to a married woman legatee during coverture, under the law before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), see Poole v. Poole (1871), 7 Ch. App. 17, 19; Silverside v. Silverside (1858), 25 Beav. 340 (children of legatee); Douglas v. Willes (1849), 7 Hare. 318 (assignees of legatee, under assignment before advance); Hewitt v. Jardine (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 58, unless it is necessarily implied (*White v. that the interests of the donees in capital are, if possible, to be then ascertained (m), without interest up to the death of the testator (n), or the time fixed for distribution (o) but with interest from that time to the date of actual distribution (p), generally at 4 per cent. per annum (q); and that the interests of the donees in intermediate income until actual distribution is in proportion to their shares in capital as so ascertained (r), whenever it is possible thus to calculate the total value of the testator's estate (a) and the donees' interests in capital; and that for this purpose interest on the advances is not to be brought into account except where it is necessary to do so (b), for example where the above calculation cannot be made (c) or the will otherwise directs (d). It appears, however, that each donee bears a share of any annuities charged on the estate, according to his aliquot share as determined by the will apart from hotchpot (e).

The word "advances" primarily means advances of money, whether by way of loan or by payment at the request of the (m) Provided that the total value of the testator's estate can be ascertained (Re Craven, Watson v. Craven, [1914] 1 Ch. 358, 370), the interests of the donees are possible of ascertainment by increasing, notionally, the value of the estate by the total amount of the advances, dividing the result into the aliquot shares directed by the will, and then debiting each donee with his own advances (*Re Hargreaves, Hargreaves v. If the clause relates to advances made by any person in his lifetime, without more, a gift by the will of that person (k) or an interest taken under his intestacy (l) is not within the clause.

recited.

1501. In cases where the testator states by recital in his will the sum advanced, a mistake in the amount is immaterial if the hotchpot clause clearly directs hotchpot of the sum recited to have been advanced (m); but if the clause directs hotchpot of that sum or so much thereof as remains unpaid, the intention is inferred that only the amount actually owing is to be brought into account, and the mistake may be corrected (n).

The testator may refer to non-testamentary documents, even made subsequent to the date of his will; such documents may be referred to as evidence of the advances made (o), but cannot be used for the purpose of varying the terms of the will (p).

App. 17), or the balance of a debt after deducting the dividends received by the testator in the legatee's bankruptcy (Auster v. Powell (1863), 1 De G. J. & Sm. 99). Where, however, the clause directs hotchpot, not of the sums advanced, but of the debts owing, the effect of a composition or bankruptcy (Gold v. Greenfield (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 476) or of the Statutes of Limitation (Re Jolly, Gathercole v. Norfolk, [1900] 2 Ch. 616, C. A.) is to render the clause inoperative as to those sums.

Gifts.

SECT. 8.—Gifts by Implication.

1503. In certain cases limitations and gifts may be implied. The doctrine of implication of limitations is based, not on a necessity, but on so strong a probability of intention to benefit the persons in question that a contrary intention cannot be supposed (e); and this probability of intention to benefit must arise out of the words of the will (f). It arises in general from the presumption against intestacy (g), guiding the inferences which are to be made on the words of the whole will where the testator has made no express provision (h), and there is a chasm to be filled up in the dispositions (i). An interest cannot be implied in favour of any person or persons for whom it cannot be said that the testator intended to provide (k). Implication in general.

1504. The term is applied to the inference of gifts to persons not mentioned in the will at all (l), or of gifts to persons mentioned in the Nature of implication.

It may either arise from an elliptical form of expression which involves and implies something else as contemplated by the person using the expression, or the implication may be founded on the form of gift, or upon a direction to do something which cannot be carried into effect without, of necessity, involving something else in order to give effect to that direction, or something else which is a consequence necessarily resulting from that direction."

(g) See p. 665, ante.

(h) "If the will shows that the testator must necessarily have intended an interest to be given which there are no words in the will expressly to create, the court is to supply the defect by implication and thus to mould the language of the testator so as to carry into effect, as far as possible, the intention which it is of opinion the testator has on the whole will sufficiently declared" (Towns v. Wentworth (1858), 11 Moo. P. C. C. 526, per Lord KINGS-DOWN, at p. 543, followed in Sweeting v. Prideaux (1876), 2 Ch. D. 413, 416; Re Redfern, Redfern v. Bryning (1877), 6 Ch. D. 133; Mellor v. Daintree (1886), 33 Ch. D. 198, 206).

(i) Watkins v. Frederick (1865), 11 H. L. Cas. 358, 374. See, for example, Saunders v. Lowe (1775), 2 Wm. Bl. 1014 (gift to trustees during lives of four daughters and the survivor, upon trust for the survivor and the child or children of such daughters who should first die).

(l) Thus, from a declared intention to provide for posthumous children:

will but not as objects of the testator's bounty (m), or of the extension or modification of the interests of persons who are mentioned as objects of bounty, so as to give them interests which the words of the gifts to them in any sense, taken alone, would not create (a).

The term "implication" is not applied to the construction of gifts where the only question is the manner in which the words are to be read, and no interest is inferred which the words of the gift taken in some sense or other would not create (b), or even to cases where words are altered or supplied as being erroneously written or omitted, so long as the quantum of interest conferred on the donees under the will is unchanged (c); nor can there be any estate raised by implication in a gift of another man's property under the doctrine of election (d), or, in general, by a mere erroneous recital of a right which the testator considers to belong to the person claiming the implied estate (e).

Implication
of life estate from gift over on death.

1505. Thus, in certain cases a life estate has been held to be impliedly conferred on a person where the will contains a gift after the death of that person, and the court has from the context of the will inferred an intention on the part of the testator that that person should not be interfered with in the enjoyment of the property in the meantime (f). Except in such cases and in the cases it may in some contexts be inferred that the testator intended to provide for children born in his lifetime after the date of his will (White v. Barber (1771), 5 Burr. 2703; S. C., Amb. 701; Goodfellow v. Goodfellow (1854), 18 Beav. 356, where the effect of a subsequent codicil was not relied on; Re Lindsay (1852), 5 Ir. Jur. 97); but this is not a conclusion to be drawn in all cases (Doe d. Blakiston v. Haslewood (1851), 10 C. B. 544, where White v. Barber, supra, was emphatically dissented from; but see Re Lindsay, supra). As to the implication of gifts to children or issue from gifts in default of children or issue, see p. 849, post. Words of exclusion, as where certain of the next of kin are expressly declared not to take any benefit in the testator's estate, may be a sufficient gift to other persons, such as the rest of the next of kin; see note (w), p. 518, ante. A mere exclusion from benefits under the will is not sufficient, since such persons claim outside the will (Re Holmes, Holmes v. Holmes (1890), 62 L. T. 383).

(m) See the text, infra; as to the effect of recitals that a certain person is entitled to a certain interest, as constituting a gift to that person of that interest, or otherwise, see p. 683, ante.

(a) As from gifts on failure of issue; see p. 850, post.

Thus, a gift to A. upon trust for his children after his death, or to A. to be distributed or disposed of by his will in a certain manner, may give A. a life estate expressly and not by implication (Ramsden v. Hassard (1794), 3 Bro. C. C. 236; Acheson v. Fair (1843), 3 Dr. & War. 512, 527; Greenwood v. Greenwood (1877), 5 Ch. D. 954, C. A., per BAGGALLAY, L.J., at p. 958: "the words may be broken up into separate paragraphs . . . the trust for the children being a separate paragraph").

(c) As to alteration of words, see p. 675, ante; for examples where whole limitations were so inserted, see Mellor v. Daintree (1886), 33 Ch. D. 198; Phillips v. Rail (1906), 54 W. R. 517.

mentioned below, a gift after the death of any person does not by implication confer on him any interest (g).

1506. A devise of real estate after the death of a named person to the presumptive heir-at-law of the testator, where the will contains no express disposition of the property during the whole of the life of the first-named person, impliedly gives the latter a life estate in the property (h). Similarly, a bequest of personal estate after the death of a named person to the person or persons presumptively, at the date of the will (i), entitled in case of intestacy of the testator, where the will contains no express disposition of the property during the life of the first-named person, gives the latter a life interest (k).

1507. The rule does not apply where the donee under the gift is a stranger and not the heir (l), or is only one of several co-heirs, in the case of a gift of realty (m), or is a stranger or not necessarily all the rest of the persons presumptively entitled under the Statutes of Distribution (n), in the case of a gift of personalty (o); nor where a donee (although the sole heir or next of kin respectively) has someone else taking with him (p). The title of the heir is not necessarily excluded by the fact that he is expressly given a partial interest (q).

There is no implied estate under this canon of construction where the person in whose favour the implication would arise takes an express beneficial estate in the property or any part of it (r); nor where there is an immediate residuary clause (s); nor where the property is subject to a covenant against alienation which is not infringed as the will stands but which would be infringed if the doctrine were applied (t). Where the heir expressly takes an estate during his life in certain property, and other property is given to strangers after the death of certain persons, including the heir, the last-mentioned persons take no estate by implication in the latter property (a).

Gift over after death of survivor of

1508. Where property is given to named persons for their respective lives, either generally or expressly as tenants in common, and is given over only after the death of the survivor, the survivors and survivor are held to take estates for life (b), subject to any contrary intention shown by the context (c).

(b) The rule is founded either on the ground that the gift over modifies the prior words, showing that a joint tenancy was intended, or on the ground of implication in order to effectuate the intention (Tuckerman v. Jefferies (1708), 11 Mod. Rep. 108; Armstrong v. Eldridge (1791), 3 Bro. C. C. 214; Doe d. Borwell v. Abey (1813), 1 M. & S. 428; Pearce v. Edmeades (1838), 3 Y. & C. (ex.) 246; *Smyth v. As to the distributive construction where different properties are given and the gift over is on the death of all, see p. 854, post; as to gifts of shares in the same property, see, especially, Rownd v. Pickett (1878), 47 L. J. (CH.) 631. There is no such implication from a gift, on the death of a tenant for life, to two persons, with a gift over if neither of them is then living (*Baxter v. 1509. Implication of an absolute interest often arises from a gift over, where after a prior gift (d) the property given is directed to go over in one of several specified particular events, and it is taken to have been intended that it never was to go over in any other event (e). Thus, an absolute interest subject to an executory gift over has been implied from a gift to the donee until he attains a certain age, followed by a gift over to other persons on his failure to attain that age (f). It is not implied in a case where the gift over and the period for which the property is held in suspense do not correspond (g). Although a gift to trustees for a person until he attains a certain age, without any gift over, does not always give that person the absolute interest, it may do so if there are other indications that such is the intention (h) and that the trust is only to point out the mode of taking (i).

In this case, where the prior limitation is expressly for life only, the rule of construction does not apply to deeds (Seagood v. Hone (1634), Cro. Car. 366, 367; Lewis, Law of Perpetuity, pp. 180, 181; 2 Preston, Estates, p. 484; Olivant v. Wright, supra, at p. 650; Arthur v. Walker, supra, at p. 76).

(r) The statutory presumption as to gifts on failure of issue must therefore be inapplicable or be excluded by the context; see p. 833, ante.

presumption arises that the issue were intended to be benefited (s), and the only way to give effect to that intention is to construe the first taker's interest as an estate tail. There may be express intermediate estates and interests limited to certain of the issue; in such cases the implied estate tail is in remainder after those estates (t). A devise over on the death of a prior donee without having or leaving a son may in the same way create an estate tail (a); and where between the interest of that donee and the devise over there is a devise to the eldest son of that donee, the effect may be to give an estate tail to that donee in remainder on the estate of his eldest son (b).

SECT. 8.
Gifts by Implication.

An estate tail may be implied from a devise on general failure of issue where no previous estate is limited to the person whose issue is spoken of and that person is the testator's heir (c), or where the testator's intention is shown to that effect in the context of the will, even where that person is not the heir (d).

Other cases of implied estates tail.

1513. There is in general no enlargement of the estate of a person by a gift over on failure of his issue where the latter gift merely refers to issue taking under previous gifts (e), either by purchase or by descent of an estate tail, nor in general where the failure of issue is limited to a particular period (f).

(s) See the grounds of the rule stated in Foster v. Hayes (1855), 4 E. & B. 717, 734. The gift would also now be too remote under the rule against perpetuities, although the rule of construction was settled before that rule of law had been stated. The rule has also been said to be made "for the purpose of giving effect to the testator's general intention" (Matheu v. Gardiner (1853), 17 Beav. 254, per ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 257). SECT. 8.
Gifts by Implication.

Implication of cross-
remainders.

1514. Cross-remainders between a number of donees (g) may be implied where they, or they and their issue in tail, take shares in the property and the testator intended that the whole estate should go over together and only on failure of all the donees taking under the previous gifts. This intention can only be carried out by not letting any part of the estate descend to the heir-at-law in the meantime and therefore by implying the cross-remainders (h). That the testator has himself provided for the mode in which the donees take after each other, such as by expressly giving them cross-remainders in particular events, is a circumstance to be weighed, as showing an intention negating implied remainders (i), but is not decisive upon it (k).

Thus, a gift to a number of persons as tenants in common in tail or to a number of persons for life with remainder as to each share to their respective issue in tail, with a gift over on failure of the issue generally of all the group of persons, may give rise to implied cross-remainders in tail (l), although a gift over on failure of the issue of each of them has no such effect, but takes effect as to each share on failure of the issue concerned (m). The same inference in favour of cross-limitations has been made in a case where the property was subject as a whole to a gift over on failure of issue confined to the life of the ancestor (n).

2 Bing. (N. C.) 182; Jenkins v. Hughes (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 571, 593; but compare note (n), p. 853, post.

(g) The suggestion in some old cases (collected in Tudor, L. C. Real Prop., 4th ed., pp. 410, 411) that cross-remainders might be implied between two, but not so readily between three or more, is no longer tenable; see the cases cited in notes (h)—(l), infra. "as tenants in common . . . and for want of such issue" over); Taaffe v. Conmee (1862), 10 H. L. Cas. 64. The fact that the gift over is expressed to be "in remainder" does not defeat the implication (Doe d. Burden v. Burville (1801), 2 East, 47, n.); it was decided otherwise where the words were "in reversion" (Pery v. White (1778), 2 Cowp. 777); but the decision appears to have turned mainly on the supposition that the word "respectively" must be inserted in the previous limitations; compare Doe d. Patrick v. Boyle (1849), 13 Q. B. 100, 114.

SECT. 8.
Gifts by Implication.

1515. Cross executory limitations (o) are similarly implied to fill up a hiatus in the limitations, which seems from the context to have been contrary to the intention of the testator (p); but they cannot be implied to divest an interest given by the will (q). Thus, in a gift to several persons contingently on satisfying a specified condition or description as tenants in common, with a gift over on all failing to satisfy that condition or description, cross-limitations are implied on the death of each of them failing to attain that description (r). According as the context requires, the persons between whom the cross-limitations are implied in such a case may

(o) The rules are stated in a similar manner in Re Hudson, Hudson v. Hudson (1882), 20 Ch. D. 406, per KAY, J., at p. 415. As to implication of gifts for life to survivors, see p. 848, ante.

(p) Re Ridge's Trusts (1872), 7 Ch. App. 665 (gift of income to daughters for their respective lives, and of capital in corresponding shares to issue of daughters that should die leaving issue, equally, and if only one, to the issue of such one; but if all the daughters should die without issue, then the whole property was given over: held, cross-limitations should be implied between the daughters and their families); Coates v. Hart, Borrett v. Hart (1863), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 504, 516, 517 (issue were to take principal of share of which parent took income, and of the share of which the parent would have taken the income in case he or she had survived any other tenant for life dying without issue: from this provision and from a gift over, which was to take effect only in the event of all tenants for life dying without issue, it was inferred that surviving tenants for life were to take income of share to which any tenant for life dying without issue had been entitled). The case converse to Coates v. Hart, Borrett v. Hart, supra, namely, where there was an express gift of income and the question was whether a gift of capital could be implied to the issue of tenants for life leaving issue, was decided against implication in Re Mears, Parker v. Mears, [1914] 1 Ch. 694.

(q) "With regard to personal property, if a share once vests, though liable to be divested on a contingency, the question of reciprocal survivorship or succession can never arise" (Skey v. Barnes (1816), 3 Mer. 335, per GRANT, M.R., at p. 343; Bromhead v. Hunt (1821), 2 Jac. & W. 459; Bazler v. Losh (1851), 14 Beav. 612; Beaver v. Nowell (1858), 25 Beav. 551; Re Clark's Trusts (1863), 32 L. J. (CH.) 525).

(r) As, for instance, contingently on attaining twenty-one (Scott v. Bargeman (1722), 2 P. Wms. 68 (gift over on death before legacies payable); Mackell v. Winter (1797), 3 Ves. 236, 536), or twenty-one or marriage (Re Clark's Trusts, supra), or in the event of surviving a named person (Graves v. Waters (1847), 10 L. Eq. R. 234). Scott v. Bargeman, supra, is criticised in Skey v. Barnes (1816), 3 Mer. 335, on another ground by GRANT, M.R., who, however, said he considered the decision correct; and see Vise v. Stoney (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 337, 348.

SECT. 8.
Gifts by

be the original stocks, or their respective issues taking under the will (s), or both (t).

Although the existence of other cross-limitations between different persons does not prevent the implication (a), yet where such express cross-limitations are in favour of the very persons to whom the implied cross-limitations would convey the property that circumstance is of weight in determining the intention (b).

Cases of
construction.

1516. Cases where particular property is given to one person for life, and after his death that property with other property is given to other persons, and the question is what happens to the latter property during that person's life, are to be distinguished from cases of implication. In these cases the question is rather whether the words alluding to the time of death are to be referred distributively to the property given and not to the time of the gift taking effect, in which event the ultimate donees will take an immediate estate in the property in question (c). Similarly, where several properties are given to various donees for life, and there is a general gift over of all the properties on the deaths of all the previously named donees, the gift over may take effect, on a distributive construction, as to each property on the death of the co-tenants for life of that property (d). If the words cannot be read distributively, the heir-at-law or persons entitled as on intestacy cannot be excluded (e).

Part I.—Contracts for Work and Labour.

SECT. 1.—Nature of Contract.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

Valuable consideration.

1517. Work or labour (a), whether mental or manual (b), and however small in degree (c), is capable of supporting a contract as being valuable consideration (d).

Gratuitous undertaking.

An undertaking to do work for another gratuitously is not enforceable by action, for it is nudum pactum (e); but if such gratuitous work is actually entered upon, there is a duty in the person performing such work to exercise reasonable care, and though he is not liable for nonfeasance, an action lies against him for misfeasance (f).

(a) A well-defined class of contracts for work and labour is dealt with in title BUILDING CONTRACTS, ENGINEERS, AND ARCHITECTS, Vol. III., pp. 153 et seq. For various forms relating to building and engineering contracts, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. II., pp. 573 et seq., Vol. XVI., pp. 99 et seq. As to the performance of work in connexion with a specified chattel, see title BAILMENT, Vol. I., pp. 556 et seq.

(b) Grafton v. Armitage (1845), 2 C. B. 336.

(c) Sturlyn v. Albany (1587), Cro. Eliz. 67; see Wilkinson v. Oliveira (1835), 1 Scott, 461.

(d) 1 Selwyn, Law of Nisi Prius, 13th ed., p. 55, cited with approval in Laythorp v. Bryant (1836), 3 Scott, 238, per TINDAL, C.J., at p. 250, and in Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co., [1893] 1 Q. B. 256, C. A., per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 271.

(e) See title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 383. If the promise is by deed consideration is, of course, unnecessary; see title DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS, Vol. X., p. 357.

(f) "If a person undertakes to perform a voluntary act, he is liable if he performs it improperly, but not if he neglects to perform it. Such is the result of the decision in the case of Coggs v. Bernard (1703), 2 Ld. Raym.

SUB-SECT. 2.—As Distinguished from Kindred Contracts.

SECT. 1.

Nature of Contract.

Distinguished from sale.

1518. Whether a contract is for work and labour or for goods sold and delivered depends on the terms of the individual contract (g); but when the substance of a contract is that a chattel shall be made and delivered when completed, it is one for the sale of goods rather than for work and labour (h). If the work and labour ends in nothing that can properly become the subject of a sale, the contract is for work and labour and not for goods sold and delivered (i); thus, where materials are used in the construction of a chattel or building, but not in the construction of a chattel to be delivered in a complete state, the contract is for work and labour (k). There may be a contract for the sale of goods when the value of the work and labour is far in excess of the value of the materials on which the work and labour is expended, for the true test for distinguishing the two contracts is not the value of the skill and labour as compared with the value of the materials (l). Where a person bestows his labour on materials supplied by himself the contract may still be one for work and labour rather than for the sale of goods (m).

1519. A person may agree to do work or labour in regard to a Locatio operis facienda.

909" (Skellon v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 631, per WILLES, J., at p. 636; and see Elsee v. Gatward (1793), 5 Term Rep. 143; Harris v. Perry & Co., [1903] 2 K. B. 219, 226, C. A.; and see title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., p. 374).

(h) Ibid., where it was held that a contract for the making of a set of artificial teeth for a particular person was a contract for the sale of goods; Smith v. Surman (1829), 9 B. & C. 561.

(i) Lee v. Griffin, supra, approving and distinguishing Clay v. Yates (1850), 1 H. & N. 73, where an agreement for the printing of an edition of a book was held to be a contract for work and labour.

(k) Clark v. Bulmer (1843), 11 M. & W. 243, where a contract to build a steam engine for pumping the defendant's colliery, to be completed and fixed for £2,500, the engine being forwarded in parts, and fixed piecemeal at the colliery, was held not to be one for the sale of goods, for the engine was not contracted for to be delivered, or delivered, as an engine, in its complete state, and there was no sale of it as an entire chattel; see ibid., per PARKE, B., at pp. 249, 250, following Cotterell v. Apsey (1815), 6 Taunt. 322, and Tripp v. Armitage (1839), 4 M. & W. 687 (both cases deciding that materials used, or intended to be used, in the construction of a fixed building cannot be deemed goods sold and delivered); Chanter v. Dickinson (1843), 5 Man. & G. 253.

(l) Lee v. Griffin, supra, per CROMPTON, J., at p. 276, and per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 278; Isaacs v. Hardy (1884), Cab. & El. 287 (where it was held that a contract by an artist to paint a picture for an agreed price was a contract for the sale of a chattel). For various forms of contract relating to the sale of goods, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XI., pp. 575 et seq., Vol. XVI., p. 558.

(m) Grafton v. Armitage (1845), 2 C. B. 336; Lee v. Griffin, supra; in both cases the proposition of BAYLEY, J., in Atkinson v. Bell (1828), 8 B. & C. 277, at pp. 283, 284, that where a person has bestowed work and labour on his own materials he cannot maintain an action for work and labour was rejected as a general principle; see, further, title SALE OF GOODS, Vol. XXV., p. 114. A claim for work and labour merely does not cover materials, which should be specifically claimed for (Heath v. Freeland (1836), 1 M. & W. 543; see also Cotterell v. Apsey, supra).

Nature of

chattel or materials belonging to another party for a consideration (n). His bailment of the chattel or materials falls under the heading of locatio operis faciendi (o).

service.

1520. Where one party employs another to do work, the contract may be one of service, or one for work and labour. If the employer, during the progress of the work, not only directs the other as to the work to be done, but also controls him as to the manner of doing it, the contract is one of service (p). If the person doing the work exercises his employment independently of the person employing him, the contract is one for work and labour (q).

Agency.

1521. In the contract of agency there are limitations, both as to the nature of the employment and the manner of carrying out the purpose of the employment, which do not exist in the contract of work and labour. The work of an agent is essentially that of creating a legal relation between his employer, otherwise his principal, and some third party (r); while in executing the services indicated by the principal (s) the agent must keep within the scope of the authority delegated to him as defined by the agency contract (t), and to this extent he is subject to the principal's control during his employment. No such limitations exist in the case of a person employed under a contract of work and labour; his contract only requires him to produce a certain result (a).

SECT. 2.—Parties to the Contract.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Individuals.

In general.

1522. When one person is employed by another to do work, the person employed can primâ facie only look for his remuneration to the actual employer (b), unless it is known to both parties that the work is for the benefit of some third party and the employer is

Contract.

An infant is not liable upon a contract for work and labour done to enable him to carry on trade (d), although he may enforce such a contract (e); but he is held bound by a contract for services which can be classed as necessities, whether as employer (f) or employed (g).

Infants.

Necessary expenditure for the protection of the person and estate of a lunatic is recoverable from the estate of the lunatic as upon an implied contract (h).

Lunatics.

A person acting as the general agent of his principal in the conduct of a business has authority to pledge his principal's credit for such matters as belong to the usual conduct of the business (i).

General
agents.

The master of a ship, as agent for the owners, has a general authority to act for them, and may bind his owners for such repairs to his ship as may be reasonably necessary (j).

Shipmasters.

Every partner in a firm is the agent of the firm for the purpose of its business, and anything done by a partner for the purpose of carrying on in the usual way business of the kind carried on by his firm is binding upon the firm, unless in any particular case the partner has in fact no authority to act for the firm, and the other party either knows that the partner has no authority or does not know or believe him to be a partner (k).

The legal personal representative of a deceased person can only be liable personally, and not in his representative capacity, upon a contract entered into by him for work and labour for the purpose of the estate; he cannot be charged in such capacity save in cases where the consideration for the promise of the executor or administrator was a contract or transaction with the deceased (l). If he carries on the trade or business of the deceased he is personally liable upon all contracts entered into by him for the purpose of such trade or business (m).

Married
women.

A married woman cannot render herself personally liable upon a contract, but she can bind such of her separate estate as she is not restrained from anticipating (n). A wife residing with her husband has implied authority to pledge her husband's credit for such things as are necessary for the maintenance of their joint household in a manner reasonably appropriate to their position in life (o). The cost of necessities supplied to the wife who has been deserted by her husband or to the wife who has separated from her husband by mutual consent may be recovered from the husband unless the wife has adequate funds at her own disposal (p).

Bankrupts.

Subject to the trustee's power to intervene, an undischarged bankrupt may sue upon a contract for work and labour entered into subsequently to his adjudication in bankruptcy (q).

SUB-SECT. 2.—*Bodies Corporate and Unincorporate.*Non-trading corporations.

1523. The contracts of non-trading corporations (r) must be made under the common seal of the corporation (s) if the corporation as a separate legal entity is to be bound. If not made under seal the contract is that of the individual members of the corporation who entered into it (t). To this general rule there are the following 1524. Urban authorities within the Public Health Acts (d) may enter into such contracts as are necessary for carrying out their statutory obligations under the Public Health Act, 1875 (e).

Urban

1525. The Crown cannot be sued, nor can a servant of the Crown upon a contract made by him as agent for the Crown (f). Where, however, officials or bodies of officials, though agents of the Crown, are clothed with the power of contracting as principals, such officials or bodies may be sued upon contracts as for work and labour (g). Moreover, a public official who enters into a contract for work and labour which is no part of his public duty, and in regard to which he has no authority to pledge any other person's credit or the credit of any fund, is personally liable (h).

contracts. The liability for work and labour done for the benefit of such associations is determined according to the rules of law in regard to agency (l). Thus, if work is done for the committee of a projected railway company (m), or for a mess (n), or for a volunteer corps (o), or for a public entertainment managed by a voluntary body of stewards or other persons (p), the parties who gave the orders for the work to be done are the persons liable upon the contract (q). Persons may, however, become liable on such contracts when they have given another person authority to make the contract, or when they have so conducted themselves as to lead the person employed to do the work to believe that they had given such authority, and that person acts in such belief (r).

SECT. 3.—Formation of the Contract.

Tender.

1528. A tender for work and labour, even though in the form of an "estimate" (s), amounts to an offer, which, when accepted, constitutes a binding contract (t).

1529. A contract for work and labour is not required to be in writing unless it is a contract which is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof or for some other reason is within the Statute of Frauds (u). A person is not debarred from recovering for work and labour because the contract therefor is contained in a contract relating to an interest in land of which evidence cannot be given because it is not in writing (w); and an agreement for services, which is not to be performed within one

Formation
Contract.

1530. Contracts made with urban authorities within the Public Health Acts whereof the value or amount exceeds £50 must be in writing and sealed, and also must specify the work, materials, matters, or things to be furnished or done, the price to be paid, the time for performance, and some pecuniary penalty for non-performance (b).

Contracts with urban authorities.

1531. A written contract for work and labour of the value of £5 and upwards must be stamped as an agreement (c). A plaintiff may recover for work and labour done notwithstanding that the request of the defendant to do the work is contained in a collateral agreement which cannot be put in evidence; in such a case he recovers as upon a quantum meruit (d).

claiming payment to show that he was to be paid (f). The mere acceptance of the benefit of another's work does not give rise to an implied promise to pay therefor, especially when there is no option in the person whom it is sought to make liable whether he will take the benefit of the work or not (g). Where a professional person is engaged there is an implication, which, however, may be rebutted, that he is to be paid for his services (h), as in the case of a conveyancer (i), or a registered medical practitioner (k), or an arbitrator (l). It is otherwise, however, in the case of a barrister (m), unless for work done otherwise than within the ordinary scope of the practice of a barrister (n), or in the case of a director of a company for services in that capacity (o), or in the case of work done by a public officer in his official capacity under a statutory obligation (p).

No remuneration can be claimed for work done voluntarily or without request, even though the defendant accepts the benefit thereof and even though a subsequent promise to pay is made (q). But a request is implied so as to render the work and labour good consideration when the plaintiff is compelled to do what the defendant was under a legal duty to do (r), or when the work was done for the benefit of the defendant's property and he adopts the benefit of it in such circumstances as give rise to an inference of a fresh contract to pay (s), or when the plaintiff voluntarily does what the person employed, the latter may rescind the special contract and sue at once upon a quantum meruit as on an implied contract to pay reasonable remuneration for the work done (e); or he may sue upon the special contract, in which case he may recover damages in respect of the lost price of the work done and the profits which would have accrued had he been permitted to complete the work (f). Where a person sues upon a quantum meruit, he must be prepared to show what the work was worth (g).

1533. When remuneration is due for work and labour done, but there is no special agreement as to the amount of such remuneration, the amount recoverable by the person employed is such a sum as is just and reasonable (a). If it can be established that a certain rate of remuneration is customary for a particular employment, that rate is accepted as just and reasonable (b).

A party entering into an absolute contract to do certain work must perform the contract or pay damages for failing therein, even though such performance has in fact subsequently become difficult or even impossible (h). Where, however, from the nature of the contract, it appears that the parties must have known that the fulfilment of the contract depended on the continued existence of some particular thing, inasmuch as that thing was the foundation of what was to be done, the contract is subject to an implied condition that performance shall be excused if, before breach, it becomes impossible by reason of the perishing of the thing without fault on either side (a). Similarly, if, in the case of a contract for an entire work, the premises or things on which the work is contracted to be done are destroyed without fault on either side, both parties are excused performance of the contract, but neither has any right of action thereon (b).

It distinctly appeared that the work was finally abandoned, and the jury found that no new contract had been entered into. arises when that party has done the work and given the employer a reasonable opportunity of ascertaining whether it has been properly done (c). Where a person is employed to do work, but not upon a contract to do an entire work, he is entitled at any stage to ask for payment in respect of the work already done and to refuse to proceed further until such payment is made (d). A custom may be proved by which the person employed is not entitled to payment for any part of his work until the whole is completed (e).

When it is understood between the employer and the person employed that services are to be rendered not for immediate reward, but in expectation of a legacy, the person employed cannot, even if the legacy fails, sue the legal personal representatives for remuneration (f).

No remuneration can be recovered for work which cannot be done save by violating an Act of Parliament (g) or public morality (h); but if the work is partly lawful and partly unlawful, and the person employed was at the time of undertaking the work ignorant of the illegality of part of it, he can recover remuneration for so much of the work as is lawful (i).

work.

1537. If the employer has by fraud induced a person to enter into a contract to do work for a lump sum, the person employed may, on discovering the fraud, discontinue the work, repudiate the contract, and bring an action against the employer for deceit; if, however, he continues the work after knowledge of the fraud, he is bound by the terms of the contract (k).

Assignment of claim.

Claim for materials.

1538. A person who has done work upon a particular chattel has a lien upon such chattel in respect of his charges, but not for the cost of taking care of the chattel (l).

1539. An assignment by sale of a claim in respect of work and labour may be a good consideration to support the contract in an action for the purchase-money due on such sale (m).

A person contracting to supply materials as well as work and labour under an entire contract cannot claim payment for materials used in the work before the whole work is completed, so that if such materials are destroyed, as by fire, without fault on either side, there is no right of action in respect of the materials so supplied (n). If the contract is not an entire contract, and materials used thereon are destroyed before the completion of the work, the employer must pay for the materials already used in the destroyed work as well as for the labour already performed thereon (o).

If, on an entire contract, work is to be done upon materials supplied by the employer, and those materials are destroyed by accident and without default on the part of the person employed before the completion of the work, the employer cannot recover from the person employed for the loss of the materials (p).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Duty of the Person Employed.

Completion
by due date.

1540. It is the duty of a person undertaking work to complete it in the time agreed upon, if any such agreement exists; but if he is prevented by the act of the employer from so completing the work he is not liable (q). When no time for completion is fixed there is an implied contract that the work will be completed within a reasonable time (r).

If by his own act the person employed incapacitates himself from performing his contract, he forthwith becomes liable for the breach thereof (s).

Contract.

For failure to exercise reasonable care and skill resulting in damage to the employer an action for negligence lies (f); and, in any case, if the work is so negligently done as to be useless, no remuneration in respect thereof is recoverable (g).

Rights and Obligations under the Contract.

Personal services.

1544. A contract for services which can only be rendered by the person employed, and not by his deputy, servant or agent, is deemed to be subject to the implied condition that the person employed shall be physically capable of carrying out the contract. In such a case, accordingly, illness, and consequent incapacity to fulfil the contract, is a lawful excuse for non-performance of the work or services contracted to be done or rendered (a). The parties may, however, expressly exclude this implied condition in their contract (b).

If the person contracting to perform personal services should die, his legal personal representatives are not liable in damages for non-performance of the contract (c).

Specific performance of an agreement for personal work or services will not be decreed (d).

Part II.—Statutory Determination of Minimum Rates of Wages.

SECT. 1.—Coal Mines.

Duty to pay minimum

1545. It is an implied term (e) of every contract for the employment of a workman (f) underground in a coal mine (g) that the employer shall pay to that workman wages at not less than the minimum rate settled by the joint district boards (h) appointed for that purpose in the various districts concerned (i) and applicable to

D. 410, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 414; see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 431. The person employed is "discharged of his service, not in breach of the contract, but by implied condition" (Farrow v. Wilson (1869), L. R. 4 C. P. 744, per WILLES J., at p. 746). For various forms of contract relating to personal service, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XIII., pp. 44 et seq.

(e) As to the meaning of this expression, see title CONTRACT, Vol. VII., p. 463.

(f) "Workman" as here used does not include a person employed underground occasionally or casually only, or solely in surveying or measuring; or as a mechanic, or as a manager or under-manager or other official of the mine whose position in the mine is recognised by the joint district board as having a position different from that of a workman (Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 2), s. 5 (1)).

(g) The expression "coal mine" includes a mine of stratified ironstone (ibid.).

that workman (k). Any agreement for the payment of wages is void in so far as it contravenes this provision (l).

SECT. 1.
Coal Mines.

1546. In settling any minimum rate of wages regard must be had to the average daily rate of wages paid to the workmen of the class for which the minimum rate is to be settled (n); but the operation of any agreement entered into or custom existing before the 29th March, 1912 (n), for the payment of wages at a rate higher than such minimum is not prejudiced (o).

Basic of

1547. District rules must be made by the various joint district boards (p) laying down conditions for their respective districts regarding the exclusion from the right to wages at the minimum rate of aged and infirm workmen and workmen partially disabled by illness or accident, and with respect to the regularity and efficiency of the work to be performed by the workmen (q), and the time for which a workman is to be paid in the event of any interruption of work due to an emergency (r). The rules must also (k) Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 2), s. 1 (1). The Act is to continue in force for three years from the date of its passing (29th March, 1912) and so much longer as Parliament may determine (ibid., s. 6 (2)). The minimum rate of wages is payable from the date of the passing of the Act, although such rate was not then settled, and any sum found due by reason of this provision when the minimum rate is ultimately settled is recoverable by the workman from the employer (ibid., s. 1 (3)). The Act creates no privity of contract where none existed previously, and so ibid., s. 1, imposes no liability on the colliery owners to pay the wages of the "fillers" (Richards v. Wrexham and Acton Collieries, Ltd., Davies v. Same, [1914] 2 K. B. 497, C. A.). As to conditions of labour in other respects, see title MINES, MINERALS, AND QUARRIES, Vol. XX., pp. 594 et seq.

(m) It appears that "the average daily rate of wages" refers to wage rates paid to day men and not to piecework earnings.

(n) This is the date of the passing of the Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 2). For an example of such an agreement relating to work in abnormal places in a mine, see Jones v. Phoenix Colliery Co. (1912), 28 T. L. R. 374.

(o) Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 2), s. 2 (1). An agreement, made before 1912, that in certain circumstances workmen should receive a full day's wage, though not working for a full day, is not superseded by a rule made under the Act providing that in similar circumstances they shall be paid a portion of the minimum rate proportionate to the time actually occupied in working (MacKinnon v. North's Navigation Collieries (1889), Ltd. (1913), 29 T. L. R. 615).

(q) In Davies v. Glamorgan Coal Co., [1914] 1 K. B. 674, C. A., a district rule providing that "in ascertaining whether the minimum wage has been earned by any workman on piecework the total earnings during two consecutive weeks shall be divided by the number of shifts and parts of shifts he has worked during such two weeks" was held to be ultra vires as not being within the power of the district board. A rule providing that "if at any time any workman shall in consequence of circumstances over which he alleges he has no control be unable to perform such an amount of work as would entitle him under the price list or other agreed rates to a sum equal to the daily minimum rate then . . . he shall forthwith give notice thereof to the official in charge of the district" on pain of forfeiture of his right to the minimum rate, lays down a condition with respect to regularity and efficiency of work and is within the powers conferred by the Act (ibid.); compare Randle v. Clay Cross Co., Ltd., [1913] 3 K. B. 795.

make provision that a workman is to forfeit the right to wages at the minimum rate if he does not comply with conditions as to the regularity and efficiency of work, except in cases where such non-compliance is due to some cause over which he has no control. Provision must similarly be made with respect to the persons by whom and the mode in which any question is to be decided as to whether any workman is a workman to whom the minimum rate of wages applies, or whether any workman has complied with the conditions laid down in the district rules, or whether, in case of non-compliance, he has forfeited his right to wages at the minimum rate, and for a certificate being given of any such decision (s). If it is certified that a workman is excluded under the district rules from the foregoing provisions for a minimum rate, or that he has forfeited the right to wages at the minimum rate by reason of his failure to comply with the conditions of the district rules as to the regularity and efficiency of his work, he cannot claim wages at the prescribed minimum rate (t).

boards.

1548. The joint district boards by which the minimum rates of wages and district rules are settled are bodies recognised in each of the prescribed districts (u) by the Board of Trade as fairly and adequately representing the workmen in coal mines in their respective districts and the employers of such workmen (w). An independent chairman is chosen by the joint district board itself, or in default by the Board of Trade (a). The Board of Trade may require any body, as a condition of its recognition as a joint district board, to adopt a rule of procedure providing for equality of voting power between representatives of workmen

(s) Coal Mines (Minimum Wage) Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 2), s. 1 (1), (2). In case of a dispute as to the amount due to miners when employers claim to deduct sums for inefficiency of work the county court has no jurisdiction, and the amount due must be settled by the joint district board (Fairbanks v. Florence Coal and Iron Co., Ltd., [1914] 2 K. B. 461).

The districts for which joint district boards have been respectively established are the following:—Northumberland, Durham, Cumberland, Lancashire and Cheshire, South Yorkshire, West Yorkshire, Cleveland, Derbyshire (excluding South Derbyshire), South Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire, Shropshire, North Staffordshire, South Stafford (excluding Cannock Chase) and East Worcestershire, Cannock Chase, Warwickshire, Forest of Dean, Bristol, Somerset, North Wales, South Wales (including Monmouth), and the mainland of Scotland. Where a mine in one of these districts has for industrial purposes been customarily dealt with in the same manner as a mine in an adjoining district, that mine is treated as situate in the latter district if the joint district boards of the two districts so agree (ibid., Schedule).

(w) Ibid., s. 2 (2). Such body may be a body existing at the time of the passing of the Act, or may be constituted for the purposes of the Act (ibid.). In default of the recognition of a joint district board, the Board of Trade may appoint a person to act in place thereof; and if either employers or workmen fail to appoint representatives on a joint district board, the other party being willing to appoint their representatives, the Board of Trade may, instead of appointing a person to act in place of a board, appoint such representatives of the party in default as it thinks fit (ibid., s. 4 (1)).

(a) Ibid., s. 2 (2). The chairman may settle the first minimum rate of wages and district rules or vary rates or rules in default of the joint district board (ibid., s. 4 (2)). The office of chairman may be committed to three persons acting by a majority (ibid., s. 5 (2)).

SECT. 1.

Coal Mines.

Application of minimum rate.

1549. The general district minimum rates of wages settled by a joint district board apply to underground workmen in coal mines throughout the whole of the district for which the board is appointed (c); but if it is shown that any general district minimum rate is, owing to special circumstances, not applicable in the case of any group or class of coal mines within the district, the joint district board may settle a special minimum rate for that group or class of mines, which special rate may be higher or lower than the general district rate (d). Also the joint district board may subdivide its district into two or more parts, treating each part as a district for the purpose of the minimum rate (e).

1550. Similarly the general district rules settled by a joint district board apply throughout its district, unless special district rules, made in circumstances similar to those justifying special minimum rates, which special rules may be either more or less stringent than the general district rules, are applied to any group or class of coal mines (f); but joint district boards may agree to combine their districts and appoint a combined district committee for the purpose of settling district rules (g).

Application
of rules.

1551. Any minimum rate of wages or district rules may be varied by a joint district board, at any time by agreement between the representatives of workmen and employers respectively, and after a year from the settlement or variation of the rate or rules (three months' notice after the expiration of the year being given) on the application of any workmen or employers who appear to the board to represent any considerable body of opinion amongst the workmen or the employers concerned (h).

(c) Ibid., s. 2 (3).

(d) Ibid., s. 2 (4). The joint district board may also declare the general district rate not to be applicable pending the decision of the question whether a special district rate ought to be settled, and the general rate does not then apply (ibid.).

(e) Ibid., s. 2 (5). In Lofthouse Colliery Co. v. Ogden (1912), 107 L. T. 827, on a joint district board being unable to agree as to the line of division by which the district should be divided into two parts, the chairman had fixed a certain line of railway as the dividing line, and by an award had provided that all "pits" to be east of the line should form one part of the district and all "pits" to the west of the line should form the other part, the minimum rate of wage fixed for one part being different from that fixed for the other part; the owners of a colliery, the workings of which lay chiefly in the western district while the shafts were to the east of the dividing line, brought an action in the High Court for a declaration to determine in which district their colliery lay; and it was held, (i.) that the word "pits" in the award meant shafts, and that the minimum rate of wage depended upon whether the shaft was east or west of the line; and (ii.) that under R. S. C., Ord. 25, r. 5, the court had jurisdiction to make the declaration prayed.

(f) Coal Mines (Minimum Wage), Act, 1912 (2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 2), s. 2 (3), (4). The arrangement which may be made pending a decision equally applies in the case of rules (ibid., s. 2 (4); see note (d), supra).

SECT. 2.

Other Trades.

Trade boards.

SECT. 2.—Other Trades.

1552. Trade boards have been established for the purpose of fixing minimum rates of wages for both timework and piecework in certain branches of the tailoring, box-making, machine-made lace, and chain-making trades, and such other trades where wages are exceptionally low as the Board of Trade may by provisional order appoint (i).

Part III.—Organisation of Labour.

SECT. 1.—*Labour Exchanges and Employment Registries.*SUB-SECT. 1.—*Establishment.*Powers of Board of Trade.

1553. The Board of Trade may establish and maintain labour exchanges where it thinks fit (k), and may assist or co-operate with other authorities or persons maintaining or having powers to maintain labour exchanges (l), and may take over any labour exchange from any such authority or person (m). Advisory committees may be set up for the purpose of giving the Board advice and assistance in connexion with the management of any labour exchange (n).

The Board is further empowered to employ such other means as it thinks fit to collect and furnish information as to employers seeking workpeople, and vice versa (o).

Definition of "labour exchange."

1554. The term "labour exchange" means any office or place used for the purpose of collecting and furnishing information, either by the keeping of registers or otherwise, respecting employers who desire to engage workpeople and workpeople who seek engagement or employment (p).

Board of
lations.

1555. Regulations may be made by the Board of Trade with respect to the exercise of the above-mentioned powers, but any regulations so made must be laid before both Houses of Parliament, and they may be annulled by either House (g). Such regulations must provide that no person is to suffer any disqualification or prejudice, by reason of his refusal of employment found for him by a labour exchange on the ground that there is in existence a trade dispute affecting his trade (r), or that the wages offered are lower than those current in the trade in the district where the employment is found (s). The regulations may also, subject to the approval of the Treasury, authorise advances by way of loan towards the expenses of workpeople travelling to places to take up employment found for them through a labour exchange (t).

A Provisional Order has also been made applying the Act to calendering and machine ironing in laundries.

Labour Exchanges and Employment Registers.

1556. Any person knowingly making any false statement or representation to any officer of or any person acting for the purposes of a labour exchange, for the purpose of obtaining employment or procuring workpeople, is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £10 for each offence (a). False statements.

1557. Distress committees under the Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905 (b), and the central body for London under the same Act (c) are charged with the duty of furthering the purposes of that Act by establishing, taking over, or assisting labour exchanges and employment registers, and by the collection of information and otherwise as they think fit. County councils and county borough councils acting through a special committee established in default of a distress committee (d) must collect information with respect to Duties of mittees.

(g) Labour Exchanges Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. 7), s. 2 (1), (3). Regulations have been made under this provision dated the 28th January, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 340). They provide, inter alia, for the cases where applicants for employment may register by post, and where they must attend personally (ibid., regulation 1); for the period during which registration holds good without renewal (ibid., regulation 2); require the central office in London to be consulted before notifying to applicants any vacancies outside the British Isles (ibid., regulation 6); and prescribe the procedure upon granting accommodation in labour exchange premises (ibid., regulation 8). Ibid., regulation 7, defines the constitution and prescribes the procedure of advisory trade committees, which consist of equal numbers of representatives of employers and workmen, with an elected chairman: the members are appointed by the Board of Trade, and the term of office is three years. There are special rules for juvenile applicants. They are made under ibid., regulation 9, after consultation with the Board of Education, and provide, inter alia, for special advisory committees for juvenile employment.

Labour exchanges or employment registers may only be established, and their maintenance may only be undertaken by any central unemployed body, distress committee, or special committee of a county or county borough council, with the sanction of and subject to any conditions imposed by the Local Government Board, which sanction may only be given after consultation with the Board of Trade (f).

Metropolitan boroughs.

1558. The metropolitan borough councils may establish and maintain labour bureaux (g) and defray the expenses thereof out of the general rate (h).

Port of London Authority.

1559. The Port of London Authority must, either by itself or in co-operation with other bodies or persons, by establishing or maintaining or assisting in the maintenance or establishment of employment registers, offices, and waiting-rooms, and by the collection and communication of information and otherwise, take such steps as it thinks best calculated to diminish the evils of casual employment and to promote the more convenient and regular engagement of workmen employed in connexion with the Port (i).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Control.

Registration of servants' registries.

1560. In districts where the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (k), Part VII. (l), is in force every person who carries on for the purpose of private gain a female domestic servants' registry must register with the local authority (m) his name and place of abode, and also the premises where such registry is carried on (n). The local authority (m) may make bye-laws as to the register to be kept and any other matter the authority deems necessary for the prevention of fraud or immorality in the conduct of such registries and for regulating the premises used for the purpose of or in connexion with such registry (o). A copy of any such bye-laws must be kept hung up in a conspicuous place on the registered premises (p).

The local authority has a power of entry to and inspection of such registries (q).

For non-registry of premises or for carrying on a registry after registration has been cancelled or suspended, or for contravention of bye-laws, there is a penalty not exceeding £5 and a daily penalty (r) not exceeding 40s., and the court may, in lieu of or in addition to such penalty, suspend or cancel registration (s).

Public notice of the foregoing provisions must be given by the local authority by advertisement in newspapers, by handbills, and otherwise as it thinks sufficient (t).

SECT. 1.

Penalties.
Notice.

1561. No person may carry on, within the administrative county of London, any employment agency, that is to say, any agency or registry for or in connexion with the employment of persons in any capacity (u), without an annual licence from the licensing authority, that is to say, the London County Council or, if within the City of London, the Corporation of the City of London, authorising him to do so (a). This provision does not apply to labour exchanges or employment agencies carried on under the Labour Exchanges Act, 1909 (b), or any other statute (c), or to properly certified employment agencies carried on exclusively for the purpose of obtaining employment for ex-soldiers or ex-naval men or ex-prisoners or persons released from a Borstal Institution, reformatory, or industrial school (d). The licensing authority may refuse to grant or renew a licence to any person under the age of twenty-one, or upon the ground that the applicant is an unsuitable person to hold such licence, or that the proposed premises are unsuitable for the purpose, or that an employment agency has been or is being improperly conducted by the applicant (e). An appeal lies to a metropolitan police magistrate against a refusal to

The licensing authority may make bye-laws for the conduct of employment agencies and for the regulation of the premises used for the purposes thereof (h), and has powers of entry and inspection (i). Penalties are prescribed for carrying on employment agencies without a licence and for other infringements of the foregoing provisions (k).

Local education
authorities.

1562. The powers of county and county borough councils as local education authorities (l) include the power to make arrangements, subject to the approval of the Board of Education, for giving to boys and girls under seventeen years of age assistance with respect to the choice of suitable employment, by means of the collection and communication of information and the furnishing of advice (m). The council of a non-county borough or urban district which is a local education authority (l) may enter into arrangements with the county council for the assistance of the latter in the exercise of the foregoing powers or for the exercise within its borough or district of all or any of those powers on behalf of the county council (n).

The Special Rules of the Board of Trade dated the 7th February, 1910, issued under the General Regulations relating to Labour Exchanges, (see note (q), p. 878, ante) and relating to juvenile applicants, provide, inter alia, for the appointment of special advisory committees for juvenile employment, with power to take steps to give information, advice and assistance to boys and girls and their parents, with respect to the choice of employment and other matters bearing thereon.

(o) The central body for London has jurisdiction over the area of the administrative county of London. It is made up of members of and selected by the various distress committees, members of and selected by with the duty of superintending and, as far as possible, co-ordinating and aiding the work of the distress committees (p), of the metropolitan boroughs (q). It is also empowered to assist unemployed persons referred to it by distress committees (p) by aiding the emigration or removal to another area of such persons together with any of their dependants, or by providing or contributing towards the provision of temporary work in such manner as is thought best calculated to put such unemployed persons in a position to obtain regular work or other means of supporting themselves (r). The central body also manages the central fund out of which are paid its own expenses and such expenses of the distress committees as are incurred with its consent (s).

SECT. 2.
Advice and Assistance as to

1564. The duty of the distress committees of the councils of the London boroughs (t) is to make themselves acquainted with the conditions of labour within their respective areas, and, when so required by the central body, to receive, inquire into and discriminate between applications from unemployed persons (a). They may not, however, entertain any application unless satisfied that the applicant has resided in London for a period of not less than twelve months immediately before the application, or for such longer period as the central body may fix (a). If the distress committee is satisfied that any such applicant is honestly desirous of obtaining work, but is temporarily unable to do so from exceptional causes over which he has no control, and considers that his case is capable of more suitable treatment at its hands than

One member at least must be a woman (Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 18), s. 1 (1)). The Local Government Board was empowered, by ibid., s. 4 (1), (2), to provide for the constitution and procedure of the central body and of the distress committees; and this has been done by the Organisation (Unemployed Workmen) Establishment Order, 1905, dated the 20th September, 1905 (Stat. R. & O., 1905, p. 1347), as amended by Orders dated the 21st October, 1905 (ibid., p. 1357), and the 31st August, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 838). The Act is continued by the Expiring Laws Continuance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 15). Otherwise it was to continue in force for three years only (Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. 18), s. 8).

The central fund is supplied by voluntary contributions and contributions by the metropolitan borough councils made on demand by the central body, with a maximum of a halfpenny rate or such higher rate, not exceeding one penny, as the Local Government Board may approve (ibid.).

(t) A distress committee consists of members of the borough council, members of the boards of guardians within the borough, and persons experienced in the relief of distress; one member must be a woman (ibid., s. 1 (1)). The City of London counts as a metropolitan borough for the purposes of the Act (ibid., s. 1 (8)). The Local Government Board may, by order, and upon the application of the council of any borough or district adjoining or near to London, extend the provisions of the Act thereto as if it were a metropolitan borough (ibid., s. 1 (9)).

1565. Where a central body and distress committees have been established in any county or part of a county outside London, they have, subject to any exceptions contained in the Local Government Board order establishing them, the same duties and powers as respects their area as the central body and distress committees respectively in London (d). Distress committees of the respective councils of municipal boroughs and urban districts with a population of not less than 50,000 have the same powers and duties, so far as is applicable to their respective boroughs or districts, as the central body and the distress committees in London (e).

Part IV.—Unemployment Insurance.

SECT. 1.—Workmen to Whom Compulsory Insurance Applies.

1570. Every workman employed in certain trades, which are specified in the National Insurance Act, 1911 (m), Part II., as "insured trades," is subject to compulsory insurance against unemployment (n).

Scope of statutory provisions.

1571. The expression "workman" means any person of the age of sixteen or upwards (o) employed wholly or mainly by way of manual labour (p) who has entered into or works under a contract of service with an employer (q), whether such contract is expressed or implied, is oral or in writing. The expression also applies to unemployed persons if, when employed, they satisfy the foregoing conditions. An indentured apprentice is not a workman for the purposes of compulsory insurance (r). (r) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 197 (1). "Workman" includes any person employed under a local or other public authority, who would have been a workman within the definition if the contract with the authority had been a contract of service (National Insurance (Part II. Amendment) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 57), s. 15 (1)). Any question whether a person is a workman within this definition is determined in like manner as questions whether a workman is a workman in respect of whom contributions are payable, or whether a trade is an "insured trade" (National Insurance (Part II. Amendment) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 57), s. 3 (1); and see note (u), p. 886, post, and p. 902, post).

the Crown, unless serving in an established capacity in its permanent service (s), are on the same footing as those in private employment (t).

1572. The "insured trades" are the following, namely (u):—

(1) Building—that is, the construction, alteration, repair, decoration, or demolition of buildings (v), including the manufacture of any fittings of wood of a kind commonly made in builders' workshops or yards;

(2) Construction of works—that is, the construction, reconstruction, or alteration (w) of railroads, docks, harbours, canals, embankments, bridges, piers or other works of construction;

(3) Shipbuilding—that is, the construction, alteration, repair, or decoration of ships, boats or other craft by persons not being usually members of a ship's crew, including the manufacture of any fittings of wood of a kind commonly made in a shipbuilding yard;

(4) Mechanical engineering (a), including the manufacture of ordnance and firearms;

(5) Ironfounding, whether included under the foregoing headings or not;

(6) Construction of vehicles—that is, the construction, repair, or decoration of vehicles;

(7) Sawmilling, including machine woodwork, carried on in con-

(s) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 107 (3).

(t) Subject, however, to such modifications as may be made by Order in Council for adapting the Act to such workmen: see Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 1002), regulation 37. By Order in Council dated the 24th June, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 1026), special regulations as to unemployment insurance books, stamping etc. in the case of workmen employed by the Admiralty are substituted for the Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, regulations 3—9, as to which see note (e), p. 890, post. There is a similar Order in Council (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 1035) relating to workmen employed in the service of the Army Council.

(u) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 84, Sched. VI. Ibid., s. 89 (1), provides for the appointment of an umpire by the Crown for the purposes of unemployment insurance, and by ibid., s. 91 (1) (b), the Board of Trade has power to make regulations for giving employers, workmen and the Board an opportunity of obtaining a decision by the umpire on any question whether compulsory insurance applies to any workman or class of workmen. As to the umpire's jurisdiction, see Robinson v. Morewood (1914), 30 T. L. R. 547. The Unemployment Insurance (Umpire) Regulations, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 1023), prescribe, inter alia, the form in which applications for the decision of the umpire are made, provide for publication of the notice of the application in the Board of Trade Journal in the more important cases, and indicate the manner in which persons interested may make representations to him. By the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 101 (6), the umpire's decision is made final in proceedings under the Act (see, further, p. 902, post). The decisions of the umpire, numbering many hundreds, are collected and indexed in volumes published at intervals, and the Board of Trade Journal (weekly) and Board of Trade Labour Gazette (monthly) contain the most recent decisions (see Unemployment Insurance (Umpire) Regulations, 1912, Regulation 5).

(v) See Robinson v. Morewood, supra.

(w) The umpire has decided, in the cases of railroads (Decision No. 178A) and tramway lines (Decision No. 221), that the word "alteration" does not refer to work of a kind usually chargeable to revenue account.

nexion with any other insured trade or of a kind commonly so carried on.

In determining whether any trade is an insured trade regard is had to the nature of the work in which the workman is engaged rather than to the business of the employer (b).

1573. Compulsory insurance does not apply in the case of a workman in a district which is rural in character who is employed in an insured trade occasionally only, usually following some other occupation, but employer and workman may, in such a case, agree to insure (c).

The Board of Trade may make regulations for permitting workmen who are employed under the same employer partly in an insured trade and partly not, to be treated, with the employer's consent, as if they were wholly employed in an insured trade (d).

Temporary work provided by a central body or distress committee, or to the provision of which those bodies contribute, under the Unemployed Workmen Act, 1905 (e), is not deemed employment in an insured trade (f).

1574. The Board of Trade may, with the consent of the Treasury, extend by special order (g) compulsory insurance against unemployment to other trades, or to vary the definition of "workman" with respect to age, and may do so either with or without modifications of rates of contribution (h) or rates or periods of benefit (i).

(b) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 107 (2). The chief classes of workmen affected by this principle are: (i.) Building trade operatives, such as bricklayers, carpenters, joiners, plumbers, painters, scaffolders, plasterers, and the labourers of each (Decision No. 54). (ii.) Mechanics, such as fitters, smiths and their labourers. Thus, the wheelwrights employed by a firm of brickmakers have been held to be insurable (Decision No. 54) on the ground that they are engaged in the construction or repair of vehicles, which is one of the "insured trades." On the other hand, stokers, engine drivers etc. are not regarded as working upon the maintenance or upkeep of machinery and are therefore not to be insured (see Decision No. 55). The umpire has decided that contributions are payable in respect of the following, namely: all classes of labourers in factories and workshops or in yards or stores immediately connected therewith, when the aforesaid factories or workshops are wholly or mainly engaged in carrying on any of the insured trades (Decision No. 749). This decision covers such workmen as packers, window-cleaners, and store-keepers' labourers.

(c) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 97. The meaning of the word "occasionally" is illustrated in Decision No. 1198, where contributions are declared to be payable in respect of the following, namely:—Estate carpenters, masons and slaters described as working at general estate repairs to farm buildings and cottages or rebuilding the same in the Mostyn district, North Wales, when not occupied in their small holdings, at hay and corn harvest, and attending local cattle sales or fairs. In the opinion of the umpire workmen as above described cannot be regarded as employed in an insured trade "occasionally only."

1575. The Board of Trade may also, by special order (j), exclude from compulsory insurance any occupation which appears to be common to insured and uninsured trades alike, and ancillary only to the purposes of an insured trade; also any occupation which appears to be an occupation in a business which, though concerned with the making of parts or the preparation of materials for use in connexion with an insured trade, is mainly carried on as a separate business or in connexion with trades other than insured trades (k). Any workman who, by reason of such an order, has ceased to be employed in an insured trade, and in respect of whom the number of contributions paid are less than ten, may within six months after the making of the order, or after the 10th August, 1914, whichever is the later, apply for repayment of the contributions paid by him whilst employed in the occupation so excluded, any unemployment benefit he may have received being deducted; but if after such repayment he becomes entitled to unemployment benefit he will be treated as if no contributions had been paid in respect of him while so employed (l). The Board of Trade may also exempt any class of workmen who are in as permanent a position as that of persons serving in an established capacity in the permanent service of the Crown, regard being had to their claim to pension or to the other terms of their service (m).

Insurance (Part II. Amendment) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 57), s. 10. No such special order may be made if the preliminary inquiry results in a report against it, or if the order would increase the public contribution to the unemployment fund (see p. 800, post) to a sum exceeding one million pounds a year before the expiration of three years from the order, also the normal rate of contributions by workmen and employers (see pp. 889, 890, post) must not be increased (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 103). The approval in writing of the person who held the inquiry is necessary to any variations from the draft order contained in the final order (National Insurance (Part II. Amendment) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 57), s. 11). As to benefits, see pp. 891 et seq., post.

The drivers or attendants of any vehicle; (ii.) stablemen or other workmen employed in tending horses or to clean any vehicle; (iii.) wood carvers; (iv.) workmen employed in the manufacture and fitting of upholstery for the purpose of the construction, alteration, repair or decoration of buildings, ships, boats or other craft, unless such manufacture and fitting is substantially the sole occupation of such workmen; (v.) workmen employed in the manufacture of fittings of leather or celluloid for cycles or motor cycles. The Special Exclusion (Dredgermen etc.) Order, 1913 (Stat. R. & O., 1913, p. 2341), excludes the occupation followed by crews of dredgers, hoppers, or other vessels engaged in (i.) excavating materials by dredging, or conveying materials so excavated, or (ii.) conveying away materials, whether excavated or not, in or in connexion with the construction, reconstruction, or alteration of harbours, docks or channels. The Special Exclusion (Stone Carvers and Sculptors) Order, 1913 (Stat. R. & O., 1913, p. 2342), excludes stone carvers and sculptors.

SECT. 2.—Contributions.

SECT. 2.
Contributions.Amount of contribution.

1576. By way of unemployment insurance contribution every workman (n) of the age of eighteen and upwards employed within the United Kingdom in an insured trade (o) must pay $2\frac{1}{2}d.$ for every week he is so employed (p) and in receipt of remuneration from his employer (q); and $2\frac{1}{2}d.$ is payable in respect of each workman by every employer of one or more workmen for each week he employs the workman (p) and pays him remuneration (q) in an insured trade (o). In the case of workmen below eighteen years of age the contributions of workman and employer are in each case $1d.$ instead of $2\frac{1}{2}d.$ (r). A period of employment of less than a week counts as a week unless such period is two days or less, when the contributions of workman and employer are each $1d.$ if the period does not exceed one day, and $2d.$ if it exceeds one but is not more than two days (s).

1577. A member of the Naval Reserves, Army Reserve, or Territorial Force employed in an insured trade (t) is, during training, provided that he receives pay from army or navy funds, deemed to be in the employment of the Crown in an insured trade (u).

1578. Subject to regulations made by the Board of Trade (b), the employer is, in the first instance, liable to pay both his own and the workman's contributions, but is entitled, subject to such regulations (b), to recover the workman's contribution by deduction from wages or any other payment payable by him to the workman (but not otherwise), notwithstanding any statute or contract to the contrary, provided such deduction is from wages or other payment in respect of the period, or part of the period, of employment for which the contribution was payable, or in respect of a period of employment ending not later than four weeks after the termination of the period for which the contribution was payable (c). employer cannot, however, in any way recover his own contributions from the workman notwithstanding any contract to the contrary (d). The Board of Trade may make regulations as to the payment and collection of contributions, and in particular as to the stamps, books and cards used for that purpose (e).

Contributions made by an employer on the workman's behalf are deemed to be contributions by the workman (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 107 (1)).

(d) Ibid., s. 85 (4).

(e) Ibid., s. 85 (5). The Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, as amended by the Unemployment Insurance (Supplementary) Regulations, 1913 (Stat. R. & O., 1913, p. 2342), and the Unemployment Insurance (Supplementary) Regulations, 1914, make provision by regulations 3—9 as to unemployment insurance books, stamping etc. Every workman employed or about to be employed in an insured trade must obtain an "unemployment book," for which no charge is made, from the labour exchange or other "local office." The book must be delivered by the workman to the employer (see Nunnery Colliery Co. v. Stanley (1914), 30 T. L. R. 549), and the latter then becomes responsible for its safe custody and must produce it to an inspector as required, but the workman has the right to inspect it. If the book is at a local office the workman must deliver up the receipt for it, so that the employer may obtain the book therefrom. A person returning to the local office a lost book may receive a reward not exceeding 1s., and the person responsible for the safe custody of the book at the time it was lost is liable to repay the sum (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 100 (3)). On leaving the employment the workman must obtain the book from the employer and, if unemployed, deliver it to the local office, where it will be kept until the workman again obtains employment in an insured trade. If for any reason the book is not thus returned to the workman, the employer must hand it in to the local office. An employer is not liable in damages in respect of loss of employment sustained by a workman by reason of the latter's failure to produce his unemployment insurance card or book, such card or book having been posted to the workman by the employer but lost in the post (Price v. Webb, [1913] 2 K. B. 367). On the death of a workman the book must be delivered to the local office. A book is current for a certain specified number of weeks, after which it must be returned to the local office and a fresh book obtained. On or before each payment of wages, or at weekly intervals, and on the termination of employment, the employer must affix to the book stamps representing the value of his own and the workman's contributions (see p. 889, ante), and must then cancel such stamps. Where remuneration is in some form other than wages, board or lodging for instance, the stamps must be affixed on termination of the employment, or, if the employment lasts more than a week, on the last day of employment in each calendar week. Stamps are procurable through the Post Office; see National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 108; the Inland Revenue Commissioners may (ibid.) make regulations applying to insurance stamps the Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 38), and the Post Office Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 48), s. 85; see title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., pp. 700 et seq. Such regulations have been made dated the 6th February, 1914. In cases of regular employment, the employer may, in lieu of stamping books as above, deposit with the Board of Trade a sum equal to the estimated amount of the contributions payable by him in respect of himself and the workman for three months or such less period as the Board may agree to. The Board may accept such sum in the form of weekly payments. The Emergency Book (Unemployment Insurance) Regulations, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 1020), provide for the supply of an emergency book to the employer in cases where the workman has failed to deliver an unemployment book to him.

1579. Regulations may similarly be made for providing that where any workmen are employed in or for the purposes of the business of any person, but are not actually employed by him, he, as the substantial employer, may be treated as their employer, and may deduct from any payments made by him to the actual or immediate employer any sums paid by him as contributions on behalf of the workmen, and for allowing the immediate employer to recover the like sums from the workmen (f). Substantial and actual employers.

1580. In the distribution of the property of a bankrupt (g) and in the distribution of the assets of a company being wound up (h) unless voluntarily merely for the purposes of reconstruction or amalgamation with another company (i), there are included among the debts which are to be paid in priority to all other debts all contributions payable in respect of unemployment insurance contributions by the bankrupt or company during the four months before the date of the receiving order or, as the case may be, the commencement of the winding up, or the winding-up order (k). Preferential debt.

SECT. 3.—Unemployment Benefit.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Conditions to be Fulfilled.

1581. A workman is entitled to "unemployment benefit" so long as he fulfils the following conditions (l):— When unemployment benefit payable.

(1) He must be a workman (m) who has been employed in an insured trade (n).

(f) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 91 (1) (f). Such provision is made by the Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, regulation 36, where the immediate employer is "some other person who himself works wholly or mainly by way of manual labour in that business." The substantial employer is there required to pay the contributions under the Act in respect of insured trades. The Board of Trade, however, by the Regulation in question, retains the power to "direct to the contrary." By a Direction as to Sub-contractors and Piecemasters in the Building Trade and in Works of Construction (Stat. R. & O., 1913, p. 2345), the immediate employer is ordered to be treated as the employer, "in the case of workmen employed in building and construction of works, where the substantial employer has not an exclusive right to the services of the immediate employer."

In the case of the winding up of a company within the meaning of the Stannaries Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 43), the contributions payable in respect of a miner have the like priority as is conferred on miners' wages by ibid., s. 9 (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 110 (2)). Formal proof of the debts to which priority is thus given in respect of contributions is not required unless otherwise provided by rules made under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52) (repealed as from the 1st January, 1915, and re-enacted by the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59)), or the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69) (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 110 (1)).

conditions.

(2) He must be unemployed. A workman is not deemed to be unemployed whilst he is following any remunerative occupation in an insured trade, or any other occupation from which he derives remuneration or profit greater than unemployment benefit would yield, unless such other occupation has ordinarily been followed by him in addition to his employment in an insured trade and outside the ordinary working hours of such trade, and the vote of remuneration therefrom does not exceed £1 a week (n).

(3) He must prove certain "statutory conditions," namely (o), that not less than ten contributions (p) have been paid by him; that he is capable of work but is unable to obtain suitable employment; that he has not exhausted his right to unemployment benefit; that he has made application for unemployment benefit in the prescribed manner (q); and that since the date of the application he has been continuously unemployed (r). If the repeated failure of any insured workman to obtain or retain employment appears to be due to defective skill or knowledge, the insurance officer may offer to arrange for a test of his skill or knowledge at the expense of the unemployment fund; and if the workman does not avail himself of the offer, or does not produce satisfactory evidence of competence, or if the test proves defective skill or knowledge and there is no prospect of such defects being remedied, such facts are to be taken into consideration in determining what is suitable employment for the workman; if it appears, however, that technical instruction would probably remedy such defects, and that the charge on the unemployment fund is likely thereby to be decreased, such technical instruction may be provided at the expense of the fund (s). A workman is not to be deemed to have failed to satisfy the statutory conditions only because he has declined an offer of employment in a situation vacant in consequence of a stoppage of work due to a trade dispute (a); or an offer of employment in the district where he was last ordinarily employed at a rate of wages lower, or on conditions less favourable, than

(q) The Board of Trade may make regulations for prescribing the manner in which claims may be made (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 91 (1)). The form of written application is prescribed in the • Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, regulation 10, Sched. I.

(r) Two periods of unemployment of not less than two days each, separated by a period of not more than two days, during which the workman has not been employed for more than twenty-four hours, or two periods of unemployment of not less than one week each, separated by an interval of not more than six weeks, are treated as continuous unemployment (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 107 (1)).

(a) Ibid., s. 86 (a). A "trade dispute" means any dispute between employers and workmen, or between workmen and workmen, which is connected with the employment, non-employment, terms of employment, or conditions of labour of any persons, whether or not workmen in the employment of the employer with whom the dispute arises (ibid., s. 107 (1)).

(4) He must not be disqualified. The following are disqualifications, namely:—loss of employment by reason of a stoppage of work due to a trade dispute (d) at the factory, workshop, or other premises where he was employed (e), in which case the disqualification lasts so long as the stoppage continues, but the disqualification is removed if he has, during the stoppage, become bonâ fide employed elsewhere in an insured trade (f); loss of employment through misconduct or through voluntarily leaving without just cause, in which case the disqualification lasts for six weeks from the date of such loss of employment (g); being an inmate of any prison or workhouse or other institution supported wholly or partly out of public funds (h); temporary or permanent residence outside the United Kingdom (i); or the receipt of sickness benefit, disablement benefit, or disablement allowance under the provisions relating to national health insurance (j).

tions.

1582. No unemployment benefit is payable for the first week of any period of unemployment (k). A period of unemployment commences when the workman has applied for unemployment benefit in the prescribed manner (l); and any time during which a workman is disqualified for receiving such benefit (m) is excluded in computing periods of unemployment (n).

1583. For workmen of the age of eighteen and upwards the scale of unemployment benefit is 7s. per week. No benefit is payable in the case of a workman below the age of seventeen; and in the case of a workman of seventeen years of age but below eighteen half the rate for workmen of the age of eighteen and upwards is payable (o).

SECT. 8.
Unemploy-

Benefit.

Duration of benefit.

Benefit is not payable for more than fifteen weeks in an insurance year, nor for a fraction of a day. Also no workman may receive more benefit than in the proportion of one week's benefit for every five contributions paid by him (p), but a workman over twenty-one who has habitually worked at an insured trade before the commencement of the Act (q) may add to the number of his actual contributions five contributions for each period of three months or part of such period during which he has so worked before the commencement of the Act up to a maximum of twenty-five contributions (r). Where contributions are paid at intervals greater than a week each contribution counts as so many contributions as there are weeks in the period for which the contribution is paid (s). The penny a week contribution paid by workmen below the age of eighteen (t) is counted as two-fifths of a contribution except as regards the payment of unemployment benefit before the age of eighteen, or as regards the fulfilment of the first "statutory condition" for the receipt of unemployment benefit (u); and the reduced rates of 1*d.* and 2*d.* payable when the period of employment is two days or less (v) count as two-fifths or four-fifths of a contribution respectively (w).

rates and periods.

1584. The Board of Trade is empowered to prescribe other rates of benefit than that above-mentioned within limits of 6*s.* and 8*s.*, and to reduce the period of benefit below fifteen weeks. Other alterations in regard to rates and periods can only be effected by special order (x). Rates and periods may be prescribed either generally or in respect of any particular trade or branch thereof (a).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Miscellaneous Provisions.

Evidence.

1585. The Board of Trade may make regulations prescribing the evidence to be required as to the fulfilment of the conditions and qualifications for benefit (b).

(p) See pp. 889, 890, ante.

(q) The Act came into operation on the 15th July, 1912.

(r) A workman in respect of whom no contributions have been paid before the 10th August, 1914, is not entitled to any such additions (National Insurance (Part II. Amendment) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 57), s. 17 (2)).

"Insurance year" means a prescribed period of not less than fifty-two nor more than fifty-three weeks (ibid., s. 18 (2)); and see Unemployment Insurance (Supplementary) Regulations, 1914 (regulation 6), which provides that the "insurance year" shall end on the 17th July, 1915, and thereafter on the Saturday nearest to the 14th July in every year.

SECT. 4.—Refunds and Repayments of Contributions.

1588. If an employer has paid not less than forty-five contributions during an insurance year (e) in respect of a workman, the Board of Trade must refund to the employer out of the unemployment fund the sum of 3s. in respect of the workman. Application for such refund must be made within two months of the termination of the insurance year in respect of which the claim is made (f). In calculating the number of contributions so paid, any contributions from which he may have been exempted in respect of workmen working short time (g) are deemed to have been paid; any contributions paid by the Crown in respect of Reservists or members of the Territorial Force during training (h) are deemed to have been paid by the employer by whom the workman was employed immediately before the training; and where the employer has made an arrangement with a labour exchange for the discharge by the latter of his duties in regard to unemployment insurance he is, in respect of any contributions paid under such arrangement, deemed to have paid that number of contributions which he would have been liable to pay in the absence of such an arrangement (i).

employer.

1589. When it appears to the Board of Trade that there is exceptional unemployment in any trade or branch of a trade, the Board may, on application in the prescribed manner by any employer in that trade or branch, and under the prescribed show by the production of his insurance book or otherwise that he is not in receipt of sickness or disablement benefit or allowance, and attend at the local office and sign a register as evidence of being unemployed on every working day or at longer intervals if he resides more than three miles from the local office. Benefit is paid weekly at the local office at which the workman's unemployment book is lodged. Notice that a book has been lodged is to be sent by the Board to the workman's last employer (Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, regulations 10—12, as amended by the Unemployment Insurance (Supplementary) Regulations, 1913). The regulations may enable claims for benefit to be made and payment thereof to be effected through the Post Office (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 91 (2)).

conditions, make an order exempting workmen of any specified class or description employed by him who are systematically working short time, and the employer, from contributions. The Board of Trade is empowered to make regulations in regard to this provision (j).

1590. If a workman satisfies the Board of Trade that he has paid contributions in respect of five hundred weeks or upwards, and that he has reached the age of sixty, he is entitled to be repaid the amount, if any, by which the total amount of such contributions has exceeded the total amount of unemployment benefit received by him, with compound interest at $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum; if the workman is dead his personal representatives are entitled to make the claim (k). If the workman was over the age of fifty-five when contributions first became payable in respect of him, the number of weeks in respect of which he must pay contributions to entitle him or his representatives to such repayments are reduced by fifty weeks for every year or part of a year by which his age at that time exceeded fifty-five (l). Such repayment does not affect the workman's liability to pay contributions; and if after any such repayment he becomes entitled to unemployment benefit (m), he is treated as having paid in respect of the period for which repayment was made the full number of contributions most nearly equal to five-eighths of the number of contributions actually paid during that period (n). If the workman has received such a repayment, and has paid further contributions, he is entitled to a further repayment if the number of such further contributions exceeds one hundred; and in the case of his death his representatives will be entitled to such further repayments whatever the number of such further contributions (o).

Payment

1591. Contributions paid by employer and workman in respect of a workman wrongly believed to be a workman in an insured trade (p) may be returned in accordance with Board of Trade regulations, subject, in the workman's case, to deduction of any unemployment benefit received by him under that belief (q).

be made whereby the labour exchange undertakes to perform on behalf of the employer his duties in regard to unemployment insurance (s). Such an arrangement, furthermore, enables different periods of employment, whether of the same or different workmen, to be treated as a continuous employment of a single workman for the purpose of the employer's contributions (t), but not for the purpose of a refund thereof (a). On the other hand, a workman engaged through a labour exchange may ask that all the periods of employment during which he is employed by one or more employers with whom such an arrangement has been made shall be treated as a continuous period of employment under one employer for the purpose of his contributions (b), and regulations may provide for the refund of part of his contributions accordingly (c).

1593. In lieu of unemployment benefit being paid to the workman through the local office (d), an arrangement may be made with any association of workmen which, under its rules, gives unemployed pay to its members, being workmen in an insured trade (e), whereby the association receives periodically from the unemployment fund (f) such sum as appears to be equivalent to the aggregate amount which such workmen would have received during that period as statutory unemployment benefit (g), but not exceeding associations.

(s) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 99 (1). Such duties would include, e.g., the keeping and stamping of insurance books. It must be part of such an arrangement that the employer shall deposit with the Board of Trade a sum sufficient to cover the estimated amount of the contributions for three months, or a less period by agreement, payable by him on his own and the workmen's behalf, and that, failing such deposit, the employer shall not recover from the workman his share of the contributions (Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, regulation 32). The workman has the same right of inspecting his book while it is in the custody of a labour exchange as if it were in the custody of the employer (ibid., regulation 33). As to the performance by a labour exchange of the employer's duties under the statutory provisions relating to national health insurance, see p. 919, post.

(c) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 99 (2). Each of such employers, unless the arrangement otherwise provides, is entitled to make the same deductions from the wages or other payments due to the workman as he would if no such arrangement had been made; but if such deductions exceed in the aggregate the amount that would have been deducted if the workman had been continuously employed by one employer, the workman is entitled to be repaid the excess except in respect of any contributions already taken into account for the purpose of determining the amount of unemployment benefit to which he may be entitled (Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, regulation 34). three-fourths of the amount of the payments made during that period by the association to such unemployed workmen (h). There is substituted for this limitation on the amount to be repaid periodically to an association by reference to three-fourths of the amount of the payments made, as regards any payments made by an association to its members in respect of unemployment occurring on or after the 28th September, 1914, or such later date as may have been fixed by the Board of Trade in any particular case after consultation with the association concerned, the restriction that the Board of Trade shall not make or continue any such arrangement with an association unless they are of opinion that the payments authorised by the rules of the association to be made to its members when unemployed (inclusive of any payments in respect of which a refund may be so made to the association represent a provision for employment, as respects such of its members as are workmen in an insured trade, which is at least one third greater than the statutory unemployment benefit (i). An association may enter into such an arrangement notwithstanding that persons other than workmen can be members, provided it is substantially an association of workmen (j).

1594. The governing body of the association entering into such an arrangement may treat the statutory contributions of its members due by way of compulsory insurance (k), or any part thereof, as if they were part of the subscriptions payable by such members to the association, and may reduce the rates of those members' subscriptions accordingly, anything in the rules of the association to the contrary notwithstanding (l).

(h) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 105 (1); see also title TRADE AND TRADE UNIONS, Vol. XXVII., p. 670. The Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, regulations 14—18, as amended by the Unemployment Insurance (Supplementary) Regulations, 1913, prescribe the form of application by an association for such an arrangement provide for cancellation of the arrangement upon the association ceasing to comply with the conditions thereof; make it a condition of such arrangement that the association shall have a satisfactory system of notifying unemployed members of opportunities of employment and shall allow the Board of Trade to inspect the association's accounts etc.; provide for notice being given to the association of unemployment books having been lodged at the local office by members, together with an intimation of the amount of unemployment benefit to which such member are entitled, and, on the other hand, for a statement of all payments in respect of unemployment in respect of which the association propose to claim repayment; and prescribe that in determining the aggregate amount which a workman would have received as unemployment benefit no payment shall be taken into account during any period (i.) during which the workman's book was not lodged at a local office; (ii.) in respect of which the workman has failed to furnish the prescribed evidence of unemployment; or (iii.) during which he would not be entitled to unemployment benefit. When the workman desires to obtain unemployed pay from his association he must still lodge his book at the local office (Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, regulation 10).

For purposes of unemployment insurance, the amount of any sum which, in the absence of an arrangement as aforesaid, would have been paid to a workman by way of unemployment benefit (m) is deemed to have been so paid (n).

Questions arising under the foregoing provision are referred to insurance officers, courts of referees, or the umpire (o) under Board of Trade regulations (p).

1595. There may be repaid out of public funds to any association of persons not trading for profit, which gives unemployed pay to its members, whether workmen in an insured trade (q) or not, a proportion, not exceeding one-sixth, of the aggregate amount which the association has expended on such payments during the preceding year or other prescribed period, exclusive of the sum, if any, repaid to the association in respect of such period in pursuance of an arrangement as above mentioned for paying unemployment benefit through the association (r).

Where it appears to the Board of Trade that the rules of any association enable persons when unemployed to obtain from the association, or from the association and the unemployment fund together, payments at rates not exceeding 17s. a week, the sums which might otherwise be repaid by the Board to the association under the above provision are subject to such reductions (if any) as the Board think just (s).

SECT. 7.—Financial Provisions.

1596. Unemployment benefit is met out of a fund called the unemployment fund, which is made up of the contributions of workmen and employers, together with an annual contribution from public funds paid by the Treasury equal to one-third of the total contributions received from employers and workmen during the year (v). A charge is also made on the unemployment fund in respect of costs of administration, not exceeding one-tenth of the total contributions of workmen and employers paid into the fund; the balance of the expenses is paid out of voted moneys (a).

1597. The Treasury may advance out of the Consolidated Fund on the security of the unemployment fund any sum required to discharge the liabilities of that fund up to £3,000,000 (b); and if whilst any part of any such advance is outstanding the unemployment fund appears to the Treasury to be insolvent, the Board of Trade must, on direction by the Treasury, make temporary modifications in the rates of contribution or the rates or periods of unemployment benefit to the extent necessary to secure the solvency of the fund (c).

1598. The rates of contribution may be revised every seven years in respect of any particular trade or branch thereof (d).

(v) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 85 (1), (6), 92 (1). As to the calculation of the contribution from public funds, see National Insurance (Part II. Amendment) Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 57), s. 4 (1). The fund is audited by the Comptroller and Auditor-General (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 92 (2); see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 684). Any moneys forming part of the fund may be paid over to the National Debt Commissioners and by them invested (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 92 (3)), and see Regulations dated the 12th August, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 1043), as to such payment over for investment.

(b) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 93 (1). This is a provision made in view of the possibility of an exceptionally severe depression of trade which might temporarily exhaust the fund.

(c) Ibid., s. 93 (2). The weekly rate of benefit must not be reduced below 5s., nor the rates of contribution increased by more than 1d., and any increase must be equal as between employers and workmen (ibid.). Any order making such modification must be laid before Parliament (ibid., s. 93 (4)). As to borrowings by the Treasury for the purpose of the fund, see ibid., s. 93 (5)–(7).

(d) Ibid., s. 102. Such revision must be by special order, as to which see note (p), p. 901, post. The rates of contribution must not be increased by more than a penny above the rates laid down in Sched. VIII., nor must such variation be unequal as between employers and workmen (ibid., s. 102).

1599. The central authority for the administration of unemployment insurance is the Board of Trade. Subject to Treasury consent as to numbers, the Board appoints insurance officers and the other necessary officers, inspectors, and servants (e), but not the umpire (f), who is appointed by the Crown (g). The Board makes regulations for carrying into effect the statutory provisions as to unemployment insurance, which regulations have effect as if enacted in the statute (h), but any such regulations must be laid before each House of Parliament, by which they may be annulled (i). The unemployment fund (k) is controlled and managed by the Board (l). For certain purposes the Board may make special orders (m), namely, for excluding certain occupations from the list of insured trades (n), and, with the sanction of the Treasury, and provided that the order is not negated by Parliament, before which it must be laid (o), for revising rates of contributions (p) and extending compulsory insurance to other workmen and other trades (q). The President, Secretary, or Assistant Secretary of the Board, or any person authorised by the President, may act for the Board (r).

The Board of Trade may also make regulations for giving employers and workmen and the Board itself an opportunity of obtaining a decision by the umpire on any question whether compulsory insurance applies to any workman or class of workmen (b), and for matters consequential upon any such decision (c); and for referring to him any question as to the amount of repayment to an association through which unemployment benefit is paid (d). The decision of the umpire on any question whether a trade is an insured trade (e) or not is conclusive in proceedings and prosecutions under the Act (f). If no decision has been given, and a decision is necessary for the determination of proceedings, the question may be referred to him for decision (g).

referees.

1601. Courts of referees consist of a chairman chosen by the Board of Trade and one or more members representing employers and an equal number of members representing workmen, the members in each case being chosen from panels constituted by the Board for different districts and trades or groups of trades (h). Board of Trade regulations provide not only for the constitution of courts of referees (i), but also for the reference to referees chosen from the above-mentioned panels, for consideration and advice, of questions bearing on unemployment insurance (k).

(b) Ibid., s. 91 (1). The Unemployment Insurance (Umpire) Regulations, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 1023), make provision for the decision by the umpire of questions whether contributions are payable. The application must be in the prescribed form, and may be made by associations of employers or workmen. The umpire may be asked to revise any previous decision. Unless the question does not admit of reasonable doubt he must give public notice in the Board of Trade Journal of the application, and representations in regard thereto may be made by parties interested, and such persons may be heard before him.

(i) Ibid., s. 90 (3). The term of office of a panel in the case of the first panels is not less than one or more than three years, and in the case of subsequent panels three years; members of a panel representing employers are appointed by the Board of Trade, while those representing workmen are elected by ballot by the workmen in the trades concerned. Casual vacancies may be filled by the Board, which also determines the numbers of the various panels (Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, regulation 20, as amended by the Unemployment Insurance (Supplementary) Regulations, 1914). A court of referees consists of the chairman and of one person drawn from the employers' panel and one from the workmen's panel, each member of a panel being, so far as possible, summoned to serve in turn. The chairman must not be a member of the trade or group of trades represented on the panel (Unemployment Insurance Regulations, 1912, regulation 21).

In any case where unemployment benefit is refused or stopped or is not allowed to the amount claimed, the workman may require the insurance officer to report the matter to a court of referees, which, after consideration thereof, must make recommendations on the matter to the insurance officer (b). If the insurance officer agrees with those recommendations he is to give effect thereto; but if he disagrees, he must, upon request by the court of referees, refer the matter to the umpire (c) for final and conclusive decision (d). The insurance officer may also himself refer any claim or question to the court of referees instead of determining it himself (e).

1603. An insurance officer, umpire, or court of referees may, on new facts, revise a previous decision or recommendation, when the revised decision or recommendation takes effect as if it were an original decision or recommendation, without prejudice to the retention of any benefit received under the previous decision or recommendation (f). SUB-SECT. 3.—Inspectors.

Inspectors. 1604. Inspectors appointed by the Board of Trade have powers of entry upon any premises other than a private dwelling-house not being a workshop, if there are reasonable grounds for supposing that any workmen in an insured trade are there employed, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the foregoing statutory provisions are being complied with. They may also call for documents and information generally (h).

SECT. 9.—Penalties and Civil Proceedings.

False statements. 1605. False statements or false representations knowingly made by any person for the purpose of obtaining any unemployment benefit or payment for himself or any other person, or of avoiding payments required to be made under the statutory provisions relating to unemployment insurance, or of enabling any other person to avoid them, are punishable on summary conviction with imprisonment up to three months, with or without hard labour (i).

Failure to pay contributions. 1606. Failure to pay any contributions due, or non-compliance with any of the requirements of the statutory provisions relating to unemployment insurance or the regulations made thereunder, are punishable, on summary conviction, by a fine not exceeding £10 for each offence, and also by liability to pay three times the amount of any unpaid contribution up to a maximum of £5. Where an employer has been so convicted for failure or neglect to pay any contribution, evidence of failure or neglect to pay other contributions in respect of the same workman during the year preceding the date when the information was laid may be given, but notice of such intention must be served with the summons or warrant. On proof of such failure or neglect the employer is liable to pay to the unemployment fund a sum equal to the total of all his unpaid contributions (j).

Consent of the Board of Trade. 1607. The consent of the Board of Trade is necessary for the institution of the above proceedings, and they must be commenced

Married women who are employed under a contract of service otherwise than by the husband (d), and servants of the Crown not otherwise equally well provided for (e), are also within the scope of compulsory health insurance. For persons in the naval and military service of the Crown, including officers' training corps, there are special provisions (f).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Exemptions.

1611. The following classes of employment are exempt from compulsory health insurance, namely (g), employment under the Crown or any local or other public authority where it is certified by the Insurance Commissioners that the terms of employment secure provision for sickness and disablement on the whole not less favourable than is conferred by health insurance (h); employment as a clerk or other salaried official (i) in the service of a railway or other statutory company, or of a joint committee of two or more such companies, where it is certified that the terms of employment secure provision for sickness and disablement not less favourable than is conferred by health insurance (h), and where the employment carries rights to benefits in a statutory superannuation fund;

(l) In determining whether or not a person is employed by way of manual labour, it is his substantial employment that must be regarded, to the exclusion of manual labour which is merely incidental or accessory thereto. A dairyman's foreman and a tailor's cutter are not engaged on work which is primarily manual labour, and they are accordingly outside the scope of compulsory health insurance if their remuneration exceeds £160 a year (Re National Insurance Act, 1911, Re Dairymen's Foremen and Re Tailors' Cutters (1912), 107 L. T. 342). The manual work of an artist is not manual labour; hence, neither a lithographic artist, nor an engraver engaged in the correction of half-tone engraved plates, if earning over £160 a year, is within the Act (Re National Insurance Act, 1911, Re Lithographic Artists, and Re Engravers (1913), 29 T. L. R. 440). As to manual labour, see, further, title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., p. 147.

(m) The terms of this provision correspond with those by which casual labour is excluded from the definition of "workman" in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 58), as to which see Dewhurst v. Mather, [1908] 2 K. B. 754, C. A.; Hill v. Begg, [1908] 2 K. B. 802, C. A.; Rennie v. Reid, [1908] S. C. 1051; McCarthy v. Norcott (1908), 43 I. L. T. 17, C. (n) As to the procedure for making special orders, see note (m), p. 901. ante.

(o) By the National Health (Subsidiary Employments) Consolidated Order, 1914, the following classes of employment are specified as being of a subsidiary nature only:—(i.) Employment, involving part-time service only, in or about a cathedral, church, or other place of religious worship in any of the following capacities: acolyte, beadle, bellringer, member of the choir, organ blower, organist or other musician, sacristan, vergier or sexton; employment, involving part-time service only, in any of the following capacities: bible-woman, chapel-keeper, lay preacher or Scripture reader; (ii.) Employment, involving occasional attendance only, as usher, crier, order officer, attendant, messenger at sittings of the judge or registrar of a county court; employment as a sub-postmaster remunerated by scale⁶ payment, unless the employed person is mainly dependent for his livelihood on the earnings derived by him from employment as a sub-postmaster and renders on the average eighteen or more hours' personal service in each week in that capacity; employment as a collector or deliverer of postal letters under allowance giving not more than eighteen hours' service weekly; employment, occupying not more than eighteen hours in the week, as messenger conveying Post Office mails on station service or pier service; employment as an assessor of taxes or as a collector of taxes under the Acts relating to income tax, inhabited house duty, and land tax, unless the employment, or, if the employment is in both such capacities, the employment in both capacities, involves whole time service; employment as a distributor of stamps by the Board of Inland Revenue; employment, involving part-time service only, in the capacity of (a) civilian butt-marker or look-out man at rifle ranges used by members of the Territorial Force; (b) temporary drill instructor in the Territorial Force; (iii.) Employment, involving part-time service only, by any local or other public authority, as a person employed to act in relief of gymnasium, lavatory, or playground attendants, or park constables; employment, involving part-time service only, by a local or other public authority, or by any company or body responsible for the lighting of any borough or other local area, as lamp lighter or extinguisher, whether the employment does not include the duty of cleaning or keeping in order the lamps, unless the person so employed is otherwise ordinarily employed by the authority, company, or other body or person to whom the service is rendered; employment, involving part-time service only, by a local education authority or by the managers of a public elementary school in the cleansing of drains, cesspools, pits, or offices in or about any public elementary school; employment, involving attendance on Sundays only, by a local education authority in relief of a school keeper in a public elementary school or by the managers of a public elementary school in relief of the school keeper in the school; employment by a local education authority or by the managers of a public elementary school as a supervisor of meals provided in accordance with the Education (Provision of Meals) Act, 1906; employment by a local or other public authority in the removing of snow in or about any streets or other public places, unless the person so employed is otherwise ordinarily employed by the authority, company, or other body or person to whom the service is rendered; employment, involving occasional service only, as a mace-bearer, unless the person so employed is otherwise ordinarily employed by the authority, company, or other body or person to whom the service is rendered; employment in the capacity of (a) special constable; (b) town crier; employment, involving part-time service only, in the capacity of (a) member of a fire brigade; (b) probation officer under the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907; employment, involving part-time service only, as fishery officer under certain local fisheries committees and powers of conservators; (iv.) Employment, involving part-time service only, (a) as civilian in charge of a rocket life-saving apparatus and gear connected therewith, being the property of the Board of Trade; (b) in or with a volunteer company enrolled for the purpose of working a rocket life-saving apparatus; or (c) in keeping a look-out in connection with the Board of Trade life-saving apparatus for wrecks or signals of distress at sea; employment, involving part-time service only, by a local or general lighthouse authority, or dock, harbour, or conservancy authority or board, in connection with the care or upkeep of minor lights, buoys, beacons, signals and tide-gauges; employment as a member of the crew of a lifeboat; (v.) Employment on an agricultural holding in any of the following capacities: flower-puller, fruit-picker, hop-picker, onion-peeler, pea-picker, or potato-picker, unless the person was at the time of entering on the employment an insured person or a holder of a certificate of exemption granted in pursuance of the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 81; employment on an agricultural holding as hop-tyer; (vi.) Employment, involving part-time service only, in or about a theatre, music hall, or other place of public entertainment, (a) as bar attendant or programme seller, unless the person so employed is otherwise ordinarily employed by the authority, company, or other body or person to whom the service is rendered; or (b) as supernumerary unless he is otherwise ordinarily engaged in or about the theatre, music hall, or other place of public entertainment; or (c) as check taker, dresser, flyman, linkman, money taker, property man, stage hand, or usher; (vii.) Employment, involving only occasional service or service outside the ordinary hours of work, as secretary or clerk of a society, club, philanthropic institution, school, local pension committee, or otherwise in the performance of clerical duties; employment, for a period not exceeding one day on each occasion, as an occasional helper to, or substitute for, a weaver regularly employed in a cotton, woollen, or worsted mill, where the employer of the weaver pays no wages or other pecuniary remuneration, in respect of the employment, to the person so employed as a helper or substitute; employment as a milker, that is to say, as a person engaged in milking, unless the person so employed is otherwise ordinarily employed by the authority, company, or other body or person to whom the service is rendered; employment in the delivery of milk or newspapers, where the employment is not continued later than 9 a.m., unless the person so employed is otherwise ordinarily employed by the authority, company, or other body or person to whom the service is rendered; employment as a caretaker, where no wages are paid or other money payments are made; employment, involving part-time service only, in the capacity of (a) member of a town band, (b) political agent, (c) water bailiff; employment, involving part-time service only, in reading to the blind. By the National Health Insurance (Subsidiary Employment) Provisional Order, 1914 (No. 3) (Stat. R. & O., 1914, No. 1228), there is similarly specified employment involving part-time service only, by an approved society or a branch of an approved society, as a sick visitor.

(p) As to the definition of "outworker," see p. 906, ante. This class of employment has by special order under the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 1 (2), been made an employment to which compulsory health insurance applies; see note (r), infra. Where a marriage has to be proved for the purpose of national insurance a certificate of marriage is obtainable for 1s. on application on the prescribed form, which form is obtainable gratis from the person having the care of the register (National Insurance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 35; National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 114; and see title REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS, Vol. XXIV., p. 450); for form of requisition, see Order of the Local Government Board, dated the 18th August, 1913 (Stat. R. & O., 1913, p. 1008).

(q) The National Health Insurance (Share Fishermen) Order, 1913 (Stat. R. & O., 1913, p. 779), makes such special order with regard to such employment at any port within the limits of the ports of Penzance and St. Ives (as defined in the Order in Council of the 24th March, 1902 (Stat. R. & O., 1902, p. 258), under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 378, for making regulations for the registry, lettering and numbering of British sea-fishing boats).

(r) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 1 (2). A married woman engaged in employment as an outworker is deemed to be a person employed within the meaning of the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), Part I., notwithstanding that she is the wife of

A person otherwise within the scope of compulsory health insurance is entitled to an exemption certificate on proving that he is either in receipt of any pension or income of the annual value of £26 or upwards not dependent upon his personal exertions, or is ordinarily and mainly dependent for his livelihood upon some other person, or is ordinarily and mainly dependent for his livelihood on the earnings derived by him from an occupation which is not employment to which compulsory insurance applies (s).

Persons over seventy.

SECT. 3.—Voluntary Contributors.

1615. Persons of the age of sixteen to seventy (u) may be insured as voluntary contributors provided that they satisfy the following conditions, namely: they must not be persons to whom compulsory health insurance is applicable; either they must be engaged in some regular occupation and be wholly or mainly dependent for their livelihood on the earnings derived from that occupation, or have been insured persons for five years or upwards, or, being of the age of sixty or upwards, show to the satisfaction of the Insurance Commissioners that they have ceased to be insurable as employed contributors; and either their total income from all sources must not exceed £160 a year or they must have been insured persons for five years or upwards (w).

Conditions to be fulfilled.

SECT. 4.—Contributions.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Employed Contributors.

(i.) Rate of Contributions.

1616. In respect of each employed contributor (x) there is contributed by employer and employed a total weekly sum of 7d. in the case of men and 6d. in the case of women, these sums being herein referred to as the "employed rate." Of these total sums the employer contributes 3d. in the case of both men and women.

Contributions.

Special cases.

The balance is contributed by the employed contributor, that is to say, men contribute 4*d.* and women 8*d.* (a).

1617. In the case of employed contributors of the age of twenty-one or upwards whose remuneration (b) does not include the provision of board and lodging by the employer, and whose remuneration does not exceed 2*s.* 6*d.* a working day, the employed rate is specially apportioned as follows:—

Where the remuneration exceeds 2*s.* but does not exceed 2*s.* 6*d.* a working day, the employer pays 4*d.* for men and 3*d.* for women, men and women employed contributors each paying 3*d.*

Where the remuneration does not exceed 2*s.* a working day, employer and employed together only contribute 6*d.* a week in respect of male, and 5*d.* in respect of female employed contributors, the remaining 1*d.* being contributed out of public funds. The 6*d.* and 5*d.* are respectively contributed as follows:—

Where the remuneration exceeds 1*s.* 6*d.*, but does not exceed 2*s.* a working day, the employer contributes 5*d.* for men and 4*d.* for women, the employed contributor, whether man or woman, contributing 1*d.* (c).

Where the remuneration does not exceed 1*s.* 6*d.* a working day, the employer contributes the whole 6*d.* payable for men and the whole 5*d.* payable for women, the employed contributor contributing nothing (d).

Where the persons employed by any employer or group of employers in any class or classes of work are in general in receipt of a rate of remuneration which, though liable to fluctuation, is normally within any of the following limits per working day, namely:—not exceeding 1*s.* 6*d.*; exceeding 1*s.* 6*d.*, but not exceeding 2*s.*; exceeding 2*s.*, but not exceeding 2*s.* 6*d.*, the Insurance Commissioners may, by special order, declare that such persons are, for the purposes of national health insurance, to be treated as if in constant receipt of the normal rate of remuneration, notwithstanding that they or any of them may in fact in any week receive a higher or lower rate (e).

(b) The term "remuneration" is not confined to pecuniary payment; see title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., p. 86. As used in the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), it appears to be used in the sense in which the term "earnings" is used in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 58), as to which see title MASTER AND SERVANT, Vol. XX., pp. 201, 202.

(c) In Don Brothers, Buist & Co., Ltd. v. Scottish National Insurance Commissioners, [1913] 1 Scots Law Times, 221, a woman was paid at the rate of 11*s.* 7*d.* a week, being employed ten hours a day for five days a week and five hours on Saturdays; and it was held by the commissioners that she was employed six days a week, not five and a half days, and that therefore her remuneration did not exceed 2*s.* a day.

(d) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 4 (1), Sched. II., Part I. In the case of "low wage contributors," that is, employed contributors of the age of twenty-one or upwards whose remuneration does not include board and lodging, and whose remuneration does not exceed 2*s.* a working day, a special card is to be used for stamping purposes (see note (a), p. 918, post) (National Health Insurance (Collection of Contributions, Consolidated Regulations), 1914).

SECT. 4.
Contributions.

1619. The employer must pay, in the first instance, both his own and the employed contributor's contributions, but is entitled to recover, by deduction from wages or otherwise, the contributions payable by the latter. In regard hereto the following rules apply (g):—

When contributions cease.

Rules as to payment.

(1) A weekly contribution is payable for each calendar week during the whole or any part of which an employed contributor has been employed. A calendar week is the period from midnight on one Sunday to midnight on the following Sunday. No contributions are payable in respect of any week during which no remuneration has been received or services rendered by an employed contributor, nor in respect of any week during which no services have been rendered by the employed contributor and he has been in receipt of sickness or disablement benefits during the whole or any part of that week.

(1) Weekly contributions.

(2) The employed contributor's share must be recovered, where possible, by deduction from wages or other remuneration payable in respect of the period for which the contribution is payable, and no contract to the contrary can defeat such right of deduction. If this is not possible the contributions may be recovered summarily as a civil debt (h), but proceedings must be instituted within three months.

(2) Recovery from employee.

(3) Unless otherwise prescribed, where the contributor is employed by more than one employer in any calendar week the first employer in the week is responsible for contributions (i).

(3) Where several employers.

R. & O., 1914, No. 1267), by which the persons employed otherwise than as outworkers in the following classes of work are to be so treated, namely:—Hand-hammered chain making up to and including $\frac{1}{2}$ in., by persons of either sex, the limits of remuneration being in this case exceeding 1s. 6d., but not exceeding 2s.; machine-made lace and net finishing, including the finishing of the product of plain net machines, by persons of either sex, the limits being then exceeding 2s., but not exceeding 2s. 6d.; work by women in making of boxes or parts thereof made wholly or partially of paper, cardboard, chip, or similar material, or in those branches of the ready-made and wholesale bespoke tailoring trade which are engaged in making garments worn by male persons, the limits being in these cases exceeding 2s., but not exceeding 2s. 6d.

(g) Ibid., s. 4 (2), Sched. III.

(h) See title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., pp. 609, 610. Such method of recovery is appropriate in the case of employed persons whose pecuniary remuneration comes elsewhere than from their employers, as, for example, waiters or cabmen.

(i) The National Health Insurance (Collection of Contributions) Consolidated Regulations, 1914, Part V., provide for cases of contributors employed by more than one person in a calendar week. Where any persons are ordinarily employed by two or more employers in a week, the employers may submit a scheme as to the payment of contributions in respect of those persons for the approval of the Insurance Commissioners. The parties to the scheme who have employed any person during the week to whom the scheme applies are deemed jointly to be the employer of such person. In the case of a person employed as an agent by two or more employers and paid by commission etc., the employer in the employment on which the person employed is mainly dependent for his livelihood is deemed the

(4) Principal and immediate employer.

(5) Where employer bears both contributions.

(4) Regulations may provide for cases where employed contributors work under the general control and management of some person other than their immediate employer, making such person responsible for contributions, and enabling him to deduct the employed contributors' contributions from any sum payable by him to the immediate employer, the latter in his turn being enabled to recover from the employed contributors (k).

(5) Where no wages or other money payments are paid to the contributor, the employer must pay both employer's and employer for the purpose of contributions. In the case of outworkers to whom the National Health Insurance (Collection of Contributions) Consolidated Regulations, 1914, Part IV. (note (n), p. 915, post), do not apply, the employer is deemed to be the person to whom work is returned at a time when a contribution has not already been paid in respect of the outworker for that week. If it cannot be said that anyone is the first person employing the contributor in a particular week, the responsible employer is that one who first makes a money payment to the person employed in respect of his employment in that week. The several employers may enter into an agreement in the prescribed form for the payment of contributions in rotation. Employers desiring to enter into such an agreement must sign their names in the special book prescribed for the purpose.

(k) By the National Health Insurance (Collection of Contributions) Consolidated Regulations, 1914, Part VI., such provision has been made in the following cases, the person under whose general control and management the contributor works being referred to as the "principal employer" (and shown in brackets in the following list) as distinguished from the immediate employer:—(i.) employment in a coal mine within the meaning of the Coal Mines Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50) (the owner of the mine within the meaning of the said Act); (ii.) employment in a metalliferous mine within the meaning of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Acts, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 77) and 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 39) (the owner of the mine within the meaning of the said Acts); (iii.) employment in a quarry under the Quarries Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 42) (see title MINES, MINERALS, AND QUARRIES, Vol. XX., p. 634) (the owner of the quarry for the purposes of the said Act); (iv.) employment in a factory or workshop within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22) (not being a tenement factory or workshop, or a factory or workshop within which an insured trade within the meaning of the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), Part II., is carried on, or a quarry under the Quarries Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 42)) (see title FACTORIES AND SHOPS, Vol. XIV., p. 433) (the occupier of the factory or workshop); (v.) employment in an insured trade within the meaning of the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), Part II. (other than the trade of building or of the construction of works), where the immediate employer of the contributor himself works wholly or mainly by way of manual labour in or for the business of the principal employer (see p. 887, ante) (the person in whose business or for the purposes of whose business the contributor is employed); (vi.) employment in the trade of building or of the construction of works (within the meaning of the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), Sched. VI., where the immediate employer of the contributor himself works wholly or mainly by way of manual labour in or for the business of the principal employer and where the principal employer has a right to the exclusive services of the immediate employer of the contributor (see p. 887, ante) (the person in whose business or for the purposes of whose business the contributor is employed); (vii.) employment in a tenement factory or workshop within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), where the owner of the factory or workshop has a right to the exclusive services of the immediate employer of the contributor (see title FACTORIES AND SHOPS, Vol. XIV., p. 433) (the owner of the factory or workshop). Whether or not persons are under the general control and management of the principal employer or the immediate employer is a question of fact (Newell v. King (1913), 110 L. T. 76).

contributor's contributions, and cannot recover any part thereof from the contributor.

(6) No contract may be entered into entitling the employer to deduct from wages or otherwise recover from the contributor the employer's contribution (l).

(7) Deductions made as aforesaid are deemed to be entrusted to the employer for the purpose of paying the contribution in respect of which the deductions were made.

(8) The Insurance Commissioners may provide, by regulations, that in the case of outworkers (m) the contributions to be paid may be determined by reference to the work actually done instead of by reference to the weeks in which it is done (n).

(n) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 4 (2), Sched. III. (10). The National Health Insurance (Collection of Contributions) Consolidated Regulations, 1914, Part IV., provide as follows:—Employers who desire to pay contributions in respect of outworkers by reference to the work actually done (that is, the "unit" method) must send to the Commissioners a notice of entry in the prescribed form. Contributions are paid in respect of units of work, a unit of work being the quantity of work in respect of which certain amounts are paid, after allowing any expenses incurred by the outworker which are necessarily incidental to the work. Units of work have been determined generally and in the case of certain classes of work as follows:—Hand-hammered chain making up to and including $\frac{3}{4}$ in. (that is, small sizes), the unit of work is work in respect of which is paid 10s.; dollied or tommed chain making and hand-hammered chain making of $\frac{3}{4}$ in. diameter and over up to $\frac{3}{4}$ in. inclusive, 20s.; machine-made lace and net finishing, including the finishing of the product of plain net machines, 11s.; the mending in brown of laces, nets, and curtains, for female workers, 11s.; the making of boxes or parts thereof made wholly or partially of paper, cardboard, chip, and similar material, for female workers, 12s.; for male workers, 24s.; those branches of the ready-made and wholesale bespoke tailoring trade in Great Britain which are engaged in making garments to be worn by male persons, for female workers, 13s.; for male workers, 24s.; fives and racquet ball covering, 10s. 6d.; glove making by machine, for female workers, 13s.; the weaving of horse-hair cloths for tailors and dressmakers in hand looms, for female workers, 12s. 6d., for male workers, 16s.; fringing knitted scarves, tasselling dress and hat girdles and button making (including braid button coverings, but not silk and mohair thread button covering) in Leek and district, for female workers, 13s. 6d., silk skeining in Leek and district, 12s. 6d.; the making of paper bags in the city of Bristol, 9s. 3d., and in London, 11s. 6d.; linking and seaming by machine in the manufacture of hosiery, for female workers, 11s. 6d.; chevening and marking for hosiery, 10s.; net braiding in the city of Hull, for female workers, 10s.; net braiding in the borough of Great Grimsby, for female workers, 11s.; the snooding of fish hooks in the borough of Great Grimsby, for female workers, 12s. 6d.; the trimming of felt hats in the counties of Lancashire and Cheshire, for female workers, 12s. 6d.; the making of straw hats in the counties of Bedford and Hertford, 12s. 6d.; shirt making in the city of Manchester, 10s.; the carding of byttons, 7s. 6d.; the carding of hooks and eyes, 6s.; outworkers employed in net making by employers carrying on business as net manufacturers in the county of Dorset, 6s.; sewing lawn-tennis balls, 10s. 6d. All other classes of work, for female workers, 8s. 9d.; for male workers, 15s. (ibid., Sched. III, Part III.). Any outworker or employer may claim, on the prescribed form, to have the unit of work varied (ibid., Part IV.). In respect of each unit of work the contribution payable is the same as would be

ment.

(iii.) Temporary Unemployment.

1620. A person whose normal occupation is such as to make him an employed contributor is, for the purpose of reckoning the number and rate of contributions, deemed to continue to be an employed contributor although temporarily unemployed, but it is otherwise if the unemployment continues beyond twelve months, unless due to inability to obtain employment and not to any change in his normal occupation (o).

Contribution in case of exempted
persons.

1621. Although a person who holds a certificate of exemption (p) is not required to be insured, and therefore is not liable to pay contributions, the employer of such person remains liable to pay the employer's contribution (q) in respect of such person (r).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Voluntary Contributors.

Voluntary
rate.

1622. The "voluntary rate" payable by voluntary contributors is based upon the age of the voluntary contributor and is ascertained from the tables for insured persons prepared by the Insurance payable each week if the special provisions as to outworkers did not apply (see p. 915, ante). If in any year fifty-two contributions have been paid by or in respect of an outworker, he is entitled to a certificate that all contributions in respect of him for that year have been paid, and no further contributions are payable by any of his employers during the remainder of that year. For the purpose of calculating the number of contributions paid or of reckoning arrears, the total sum paid in respect of an outworker is reckoned as though it consisted of weekly contributions. There are special cards for stamping purposes in the case of outworkers. An outworker regularly employed by an employer who has not given notice of entry may give written notice to such of his employers as have given that notice of entry that he desires that the special provisions as to outworkers shall no longer apply to him. The employer must post up on his premises the foregoing table of rates and a statement of the relevant units of work, and must keep records of work given out. Employers must obtain the necessary cards and issue them to their outworkers as necessary. The employer may terminate the foregoing system by sending to the Insurance Commissioners a notice of withdrawal not less than one month before the date on which it is to take effect. The foregoing arrangement in regard to the payment of contributions does not apply to outworkers whose units of work would amount to not less than 30s. in the case of men and 17s. 6d. in the case of women, or to outworkers who do not themselves do the greater part of the work given out to them (National Health Insurance (Collection of Contributions) Consolidated Regulations, 1914, Part IV.). Save as aforesaid, ibid., Part II. (see note (a), p. 918, post), applies to the employment of outworkers.

Commissioners (s). Where, however, a person who has been an employed contributor for five years or upwards (t), or a person who, being of the age of sixty or upwards, shows to the satisfaction of the Insurance Commissioners that he has ceased to be insurable as an employed contributor (u), becomes a voluntary contributor, his rate of contribution continues at the employed rate (a). In the case of a voluntary contributor whose total income from all sources exceeds £160 a year, but who is entitled to be a voluntary contributor for the reason that he has been an insured person for a period of five years or upwards (b), the weekly contribution which would otherwise be payable by him is reduced by 1d. (c). Contributions by voluntary contributors cease at the age of seventy (d).

1623. If an insured person becomes a member of an approved society (e) as a voluntary contributor, the rate payable in respect of him remains the voluntary rate, although he becomes employed within the meaning of the Act (f), until he gives notice in the prescribed form of his wish to be transferred to the employed rate (g). Until such notice is given the employer pays the employer's contribution of the employed rate (h), such payments being treated as in part satisfaction of the contributions at the voluntary rate payable by the contributor, and if the contributor fails to pay the balance he is deemed to be in arrear to that extent (i). Upon giving the notice referred to, the employed rate (h) becomes payable (k).

1624. If an employed contributor (l) within five years from his entry into insurance ceases to be employed and becomes a voluntary contributor (m), he is deemed to be in arrear as from the date of becoming a voluntary contributor, to the amount of the difference

1625. Contributions payable in respect of employed contributors by a bankrupt or a company being wound up have the same priority as contributions payable in respect of workmen in an insured trade (o).

Regulations.

1626. The Insurance Commissioners may make regulations as to the payment and collection of contributions (a).

(n) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 6 (4). As to the effect of arrears, see p. 926, post.

(o) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 110; and see p. 891, ante.

(a) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 7. The National Health Insurance ('Collection' of Contributions) Consolidated Regulations, 1914, provide as follows in regard to employed contributors:—Contributions are paid by means of stamps affixed (and then cancelled) by the employer to contribution cards of the prescribed form. The stamps are procurable through the Post Office (for the statutory provisions as to stamps, see National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 108; as to regulations made under that provision by the Inland Revenue Commissioners, see note (c), p. 890, ante). A person entering an employment which entails compulsory health insurance must before doing so, or if already in such employment and under sixteen must before attaining that age, apply to his approved society (see pp. 937, 938 post) or, if he is not a member of an approved society, to the local post office for an insurance card. Application must similarly be made for a new card if the period of currency of one expires, or if the contributor is transferred from one society to another, or changes to an approved society from deposit insurance (see p. 943, post), or if the card is lost or rendered useless. If an employed contributor fails to deliver a card to his employer the latter should procure an emergency card from the post office. Arrangements may be made whereby stamps may be affixed at times or contributions paid in a manner otherwise than as prescribed herein, so, however, that no contribution is paid later than the date on which the wages for the period covered by the contributions are paid, unless deposit is made by way of security. Cards must be surrendered to the approved society or, if the contributor is not a member of a society, must be forwarded to the Insurance Commissioners by the contributor on leaving or, if he has been a deposit contributor, on joining an approved society, on a change of approved society, on the card becoming defaced, on the expiration of its period of currency, on becoming a voluntary contributor, on ceasing to be an insured person, and, in the case of a woman, on ceasing on or after marriage to be employed. Arrears must be paid by means of a special arrears card obtainable from the approved society. The foregoing regulations apply also to voluntary contributors, except that in the case of deposit contributors (see p. 943, post) the Insurance Commissioners take the place of the Post Office for the issue of cards, while the contributor himself does the necessary affixing and cancelling of stamps. The contribution of a voluntary contributor is payable on the first day of each week unless he is then incapable of work by reason of illness of which notice has been given, when it is payable on the first day of that week after the termination of the incapacity. If the contributor is so incapacitated for a continuous period of more than six days extending over parts of two weeks, 1627. An employer may make an arrangement through the Board of Trade whereby, in respect of workmen engaged by him through a labour exchange (b), or in his employ at the date of such arrangement, the performance of all or any of his duties under the statutory provisions relating to national health insurance, whether on his own or his workmen's behalf, may be undertaken for him by the labour exchange (c).

SECT. 5.—Classification of Benefits.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

1628. Insured persons, whether employed contributors (d) or voluntary contributors (e), are entitled to the following benefits, namely (f):—medical benefit (g), sickness benefit (h), disablement benefit (i), maternity benefit (k), and sanatorium benefit (l), whilst no contribution is payable for the second week. In addition to his card, the insured person is to be supplied with an insurance book for the purpose of recording particulars of contributions, benefits, and arrears. The book is issued by an approved society with the card or, in the case of deposit contributors, by the Insurance Commissioners. The contributor must deposit the book with the society when giving notice of disease or disablement or when claiming maternity benefit. The contributor must deposit his book upon surrendering his card with his society or, if he is not a member of a society, must send it to the Insurance Commissioners, and with his society or the Insurance Commissioners upon the expiration of its period of currency or when it is so defaced as to be useless, and on his transfer to another society with the society he joins, and if he has been a deposit contributor, on his becoming a member of a society, with that society, and when he leaves a society otherwise than by transfer, with that society. As to the return of a card or book to a contributor by the employer by post and the liability of the latter in case of loss, see Prie v. Webb, [1913] 2 K. B. 367; and note (e), p. 890, ante. As to the penalty for buying, taking in pawn or in exchange insurance cards or books, see p. 990, post. There are special regulations for outworkers (see note (n), p. 91, ante), grouped employers (see note (i), p. 913, ante), intermediate employers (see note (k), p. 914, ante), soldiers and sailors (see note (c), p. 980, post), and the mercantile marine (see note (l), p. 986, post). The duty to affix stamps to a card may be lawfully delegated by the employer, but he delegates it at his risk, for if the duty is not performed he is guilty of an offence (Godman v. Croftan (1913), 30 T. L. R. 193).

(c) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 99 (1). Any such arrangement must provide that the employer is to deposit with the Board a sum sufficient to cover the maximum amount of the contributions payable by the employer for three months or during such less period as may be agreed upon, both on his own and the workmen's behalf; that the position of the workman as to obtaining and delivering his card is not to be less favourable than before; and that the employer is to pay the cost to the Exchequer of the performance by the Board of Trade of such duties on his behalf (Board of Trade Regulations dated the 25th June, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 1022)).

in certain cases further benefits are payable, known as additional benefits (m).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Medical Benefit.

1629. "Medical benefit" means medical treatment and attendance, including the provision of proper and sufficient medicines, and such medical and surgical appliances as may be prescribed by regulations (n), but not including medical treatment or attendance in respect of a confinement (o).

A voluntary contributor whose total income from all sources exceeds £160 a year, but who is entitled to be a voluntary contributor for the reason that he has been an insured person for a period of five years or upwards (p), is not entitled to receive medical benefit (q). A person who is of the age of sixty-five or upwards at the time of entering into insurance is not entitled to medical benefit after the age of seventy unless the number of weekly contributions paid by or in respect of him exceeds twenty-six (a).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Sickness Benefit.

Periodical payments.

1630. "Sickness benefit" means, periodical payments whilst rendered incapable of work by some specific disease or by bodily or mental disablement, of which notice has been given, commencing on the fourth day of such incapacity (b), and continuing for not more than twenty-six weeks. A day on which the incapacitated person was prevented, by the incapacity, from doing any effective work is treated, for this purpose, as a day of incapacity, but a Sunday is not so treated unless he would, but for the incapacity, have worked on that day (c). The contributor is not entitled to this benefit until twenty-six weeks have elapsed since his entry into insurance, and at least twenty-six weekly contributions have been paid by or in respect of him (d). The right ceases at the age of seventy (e).

Recurring or subsequent disease or disablement.

When an insured person recovers from the disease or disablement in respect of which he has received sickness benefit, any recurrence thereof, or any subsequent disease or disablement, is deemed to be a continuation of the previous disease or disablement, unless in the meanwhile at least twelve months have elapsed (f), but where by reason of his right to compensation or damages a part only of sickness benefit has been paid to an insured person (g), he is to be treated, for the purposes of this provision, as having been in receipt of sickness benefit for a period bearing the same proportion to the whole period in respect of which such part benefit was paid to him as that part bears to the whole benefit, and the period so resulting is deemed to have been continuous and to have expired on the last day of the incapacity in respect of which the partial benefit was paid (h).

SECT. 6.
Classification of Benefits.

A woman is not entitled to sickness benefit for four weeks after her confinement, unless suffering from disease or disablement not connected directly or indirectly with her confinement, except where she is herself an insured person and a married woman, or, if the child is posthumous, a widow, in which case she is entitled to sickness benefit in respect of her confinement in addition to the maternity benefit to which she or her husband may be entitled (i), or alternatively to a maternity benefit in addition to any maternity benefit to which she may be otherwise entitled in respect of her husband's or her own insurance. Approved societies and insurance committees must make rules requiring any woman in respect of whom any such sum is payable in respect of her own insurance to abstain from remunerative work for four weeks after her confinement (k).

Married women and widows.

1631. The ordinary rate of sickness benefit is in the case of men 10s. a week, and in the case of women 7s. 6d. a week, throughout the whole period of twenty-six weeks (l). Rate.

In the case of insured persons who are under the age of twenty-one and unmarried there is a reduced rate of benefit as follows: during the first thirteen weeks 6s. a week for males and 5s. for females, and during the second thirteen weeks 5s. a week for males and 4s. for females (m); but in the case of an insured person who is a member of an approved society (n) and who can prove that one or more members of his family are wholly or mainly

(h) National Insurance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 12 (2). Thus, where an insured person who has received 5s. a week as compensation and, under the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 11 (1), 5s. a week only as sickness benefit during a period of twenty weeks, recovers, and then within twelve months again falls sick, the period of twenty weeks is to be regarded as a period arrived at by the formula $x : 20 :: 5 : 10$, i.e. 10 weeks, and the insured person accordingly remains entitled, not to six weeks only, but to sixteen weeks of sickness benefit during the twelve months.

1632. There is a reduced rate of sickness benefit, but with a minimum of 5s. a week, in the case of insured persons who, not having been previously insured, become employed contributors subsequently to the 12th October, 1913, and are, when becoming so insured, of the age of seventeen or upwards. The reduced rate does not apply if such employed contributor proves that since the age of seventeen his time has been spent in a school or college, in indentured apprenticeship (p), or otherwise under instruction without wages, or otherwise in the completion of his education, or if he undertakes to pay the difference between the voluntary (q) and employed (r) rates, or pays to the Insurance Commissioners, to be credited to his society, such capital sum as will suffice to secure him benefits at the full rate. The reduced rate is fixed in accordance with tables prepared by the Insurance Commissioners (s). Such an insured person may subsequently qualify for a higher rate by electing to be treated as having become an employed contributor as from the age of seventeen or as from the 12th October, 1913, whichever is the later date, and as being in arrear for all contributions which, had he become an employed contributor at that date, would have been payable in respect of him between that date and the date when he actually became an employed contributor (t).

Where any insured person's rate of sickness benefit exceeds two-thirds of his usual rate of wages or other remuneration (a), such rate of benefit may be reduced as the society or committee administering the benefit (b) may, with the consent of the Insurance Commissioners, determine, additional benefits (c) of a value equivalent to the reduction being, however, granted (d).

Where an insured person gives notice of his desire to be changed from the voluntary to the employed rate he is only entitled to the reduced sickness benefit which would have been payable had he not previously been insured, subject to such additions as may, according to tables prepared by the Insurance Commissioners, represent the value at that time of his previous contributions (e).

This benefit is not available for an insured person until 104 weeks have elapsed since his entry into insurance, and at least 104 weekly contributions have been paid by or in respect of him (g). The right to the benefit ceases at the age of seventy (h). Disablement benefit, or the alternative additional maternity benefit, is payable to a woman in respect of her confinement in addition to maternity benefit only on the same conditions as those on which sickness benefit, or the alternative additional maternity benefit, is payable in respect of a confinement in addition to maternity benefit (i).

benefit.

In the case of female insured persons who are under the age of twenty-one and unmarried, there is a reduced rate of benefit, namely, 4s. a week (l). The society must dispense with such reduction if the insured person has relations dependent upon her as in the case of reduced sickness benefit (m).

Where any insured person's rate of disablement benefit exceeds two-thirds of his usual rate of wages or other remuneration, such rate of benefit may be reduced on the same conditions as in the case of sickness benefit (n).

Sub-SECT. 5.—Maternity Benefit.

1635. "Maternity benefit" means payment of a sum of 30s. When in the case of the confinement of the wife, or, where the child is posthumous, of the widow of an insured person, or of any other woman who is an insured person. No insured person is entitled to this benefit until twenty-six, or in the case of a voluntary contributor (o) fifty-two, weeks have elapsed since his entry into insurance, and at least twenty-six, or in the case of a voluntary contributor (o) fifty-two, weekly contributions (p) have been made by or in respect of him (q). payable.

1637. In deciding whether or not to make an order under the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (x), for the payment of the expenses incidental to the birth of a child, the justices are not to take into consideration the fact that the mother is entitled to maternity benefit (y).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Sanatorium Benefit.

Extent of
benefit.

1638. "Sanatorium benefit" means the treatment in sanatoria or other institutions or otherwise of such cases of tuberculosis or such other diseases as the Local Government Board with the approval of the Treasury may appoint (z), as may be recommended for such benefit by the insurance committee administering the benefit (a). The insurance committee may pay the whole or part of the expenses of conveying the patient to or from the institution (b), and may extend the benefit to an insured person's dependants resident within their area, that is to say, to persons dependent wholly or in part upon the insured person's earnings (c).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Additional Benefits.

Benefits
included.

SECT. 6.
Benefits
in Special Cases.
Residence abroad.

SECT. 6.—Benefits in Special Cases.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Residence Abroad.

1640. No insured person is entitled to any benefit while resident temporarily or permanently outside the United Kingdom, but temporary residence in the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands disqualifies for medical benefit only. Moreover, if a person is temporarily resident outside the United Kingdom elsewhere than in those places with the consent of the society or committee administering the benefit, such society or committee may allow him to continue to receive sickness or disablement benefit. A person resident outside the United Kingdom is not disentitled to maternity benefit in respect of his wife's confinement if she is at the time of her confinement resident in the United Kingdom (n).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Arrears of Contributions.

Arrears.

1641. In calculating arrears of contributions no account is taken of arrears accruing during any period when the insured person in question has been, or would have been had he not become disentitled, in receipt of sickness (o) or disablement (p) benefit; or in the case of a woman who is an insured person and is herself entitled to maternity benefit (q) during two weeks before and four weeks after her delivery, or in the case of maternity benefit payable in respect of the posthumous child of an insured person during the period subsequent to the father's death (r). In all other cases insured persons who are in arrear are liable to such reduction, postponement, or suspension of benefits as may be prescribed, but any such reduction, postponement, or suspension of benefit must be approximately equivalent to the value of the loss occasioned by the failure to pay the contributions in arrear. The Commissioners may by regulations prescribe the time within which, and the conditions under which, arrears may be paid up (s).

(s) National Insurance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 8. The National Health Insurance (Arrears) Regulations (No. 2), 1914 (Stat. R. & O., 1914, No. 1036), prescribe, in the case of insured persons who are employed or voluntary contributors, the manner of calculating arrears, the consequent reduction, suspension, or termination of benefits, and how the right to benefits may be resumed. When medical benefit is suspended by reason of arrears or marriage in the case of a member of an approved society (see pp. 975, 976, post), the society is to give notice to the insurance committee (see pp. 933 et seq., post) and the committee to the insured person's medical attendant (see p. 946, post) or approved institution (see pp. 949, 950, post) (National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, regulations 28 (b), 29), and see p. 946, post. As to the procuring and stamping of "arrears cards," see National Health Insurance (Collection of Contributions) Consolidated Regulations, 1914, Part II., and note (a), p. 918, ante.

1642. In the case of an employed contributor who is a member of an approved society (a), that portion of any arrears which is represented by the part which would have been payable by the employer (b) had the employed contributor continued in employment will be excused, if such employed contributor pays to his society such part of the arrears as would, had he continued in employment, have been payable otherwise than by the employer, and the amount of the arrears will be reduced accordingly. For the purpose of calculating such respective parts of arrears the rate of remuneration will be deemed to exceed 2s. 6d. a working day (b), unless the employed contributor proves to the society that his usual rate of remuneration was 2s. 6d. a working day or less, in which case his rate of remuneration will be deemed to be such usual rate (c).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Inmates of Institutions.

1643. No sickness, disablement, or maternity benefit is payable to or in respect of any person while such person is an inmate of any workhouse, hospital, asylum, convalescent home, or infirmary, supported by any public authority or out of any public funds or by a charity or voluntary subscriptions, or while an inmate of a sanatorium or similar institution as the recipient of sanatorium benefit (d).

The money so withheld is to be applied in one or other of the following ways, namely (e):—for the maintenance of the dependants (f) of the person in question in such manner as the body administering the benefit (g), after consultation, if possible, with such person, may think fit, or for the general purposes of the sanatorium or similar institution in which the person in question is receiving treatment, if he has no dependants (h) and is a member of an approved society (i) or towards the maintenance of the person in question in the institution of which he is an inmate if an agreement to that effect has been entered into between the institution and the body administering the benefit (k), and if the person in question is a member of an approved society (l) and has no dependants (m), provided that the institution is supported by a charity or by voluntary subscriptions. Any such sum as is not so applied may be applied by the body administering the benefit in providing the insured person with necessary surgical appliances or otherwise for his benefit after he ceases to be an inmate, or, if not so expended, is to be paid in cash to the person after leaving the institution, either in a lump sum or in instalments. Payments in any of these ways of money withheld as above are treated as payments in respect of sickness benefit for the purpose of determining the rate and duration of that benefit (n). In the case of an inmate who is a married woman or widow, to or in respect of whom payments would have been made or applied both on account of maternity benefit payable in lieu of sickness or disablement benefit and on account of maternity benefit not so payable, none of the sum representing such maternity benefit may be applied for the relief or maintenance of her dependants, but it may be paid to the institution of which she is an inmate as if she had no dependants (a).

Indoor relief.

1644. Admission to a workhouse infirmary (b) may not be refused for the reason that the applicant is entitled to any benefit under the provisions relating to health insurance, or because the applicant is a woman whose husband is entitled to maternity benefit in respect of her confinement (c).

Outdoor relief.

1645. In granting outdoor relief to a person receiving or entitled to receive any benefit a board of guardians must not take such benefit into consideration except so far as it exceeds 5s. a week (d).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Compensation for Injury.

Compensation for injury.

1646. Where an insured person has received or recovered (e) or is entitled to receive or recover (e), whether from his employer or any other person, any compensation or damages under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (f), or under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (g), or at common law (h), in respect of any injury or disease, no sickness (i) or disablement (k) benefit is paid to such person in respect of that injury or disease if the weekly sum or the weekly value of any lump sum paid or payable as compensation or damages is equal to or greater than the benefit otherwise payable. If such weekly sum or the weekly value of any such lump sum is less than such benefit, only such sum is paid as represents the difference between the weekly sum or the weekly value of the lump sum and the full benefit (l).

The weekly value of any such lump sum is determined by the body administering the sickness or disablement benefit (m), but the insured person has a right of appeal to the Insurance Commissioners (n).

SECT. 6.
Benefits
in Special Cases.

Where, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (o), an agreement is arrived at for the payment of compensation at the rate of less than 10s. a week or as to the redemption of a weekly payment by a lump sum (a), the employer must send to the Insurance Commissioners or to the body administering the benefit in question, within three days or other prescribed period, written notice and particulars of such agreement (b). The statutory provisions which enable the registrar of the county court to refuse to record certain memoranda of agreements entered into under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (c), and to refer the matter to the county court judge, apply to agreements as to the amount of compensation, in cases where the workman is an insured person, as if the agreement were for the redemption of a weekly payment by a lump sum (d).

If an insured person unreasonably refuses or neglects to enforce his claim for compensation or damages, the society or committee administering the benefit in question (e) may take proceedings in his name and at its own expense, in which case it will hold any compensation or damages recovered as trustee for the insured person, and in the event of failure will be responsible for the costs of the proceedings (f); or it may simply withhold any benefit to which the insured person may be entitled (g).

Proceedings
by society or committee.

The body administering the benefit may make advances of benefit pending the settlement of any such claim as aforesaid for compensation or damages, such advances to be recovered out of future benefits, but without prejudice to any other mode of recovery (h).

An approved society is at liberty to give information to the registrar of the county court under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 58), Sched. II., (9) (d), but the society does not thereby become a party to the proceedings; for it is not a "party interested" and has no locus standi to appear in the county court and object to the registration of a memorandum (*Bonney v. Benefits

additional benefits.SUB-SECT. 5.—Variation of Benefits.

1647. Any approved society (i) may submit to the Insurance Commissioners a scheme substituting any of the additional benefits (k) for sickness (l) and disablement (m) benefits or either or any part of them. The scheme must be confirmed by the Commissioners before it can become operative, and before confirming it the Commissioners must satisfy themselves that the value of the additional benefits conferred by the scheme is equivalent to the value of the benefits surrendered, and that, in view of the special circumstances of the members or class of members intended to come under the scheme, there is good reason for the substitution (u).

benefits.

1648. As soon as the sums credited to approved societies as reserve values in respect of persons entering into insurance before the 15th July, 1913, have been written off (h), the benefits payable to insured persons are to be extended in such manner as may be determined by Parliament (c).

SUB-SECT. 6.—*Exempted Persons.*Benefits for exempted
persons.

1649. The contributions paid in respect of persons who hold certificates of exemption from compulsory health insurance (d) are to be applied, in accordance with regulations made by the Commissioners, in providing medical benefit and sanatorium benefit for such persons, and in paying the cost of administering those benefits. On fulfilling such conditions as those regulations may impose, such persons become entitled to those benefits as if they were members of approved societies (e). Such conditions may not require payment of upwards of twenty-six weekly contributions before the person becomes entitled to such benefits (f). Where the total income from all sources of any such person exceeds £160 a year, he must make his own arrangements for receiving medical attendance and

Deposit
Contributors Fund and benefits.

1650. Contributions by or in respect of a deposit contributor, that is to say, an insured person who is not a member of an approved society (h), are credited to a special fund called the Deposit Contributors Fund. Out of the amount standing to the credit of each deposit contributor in that fund are paid any sickness, disablement, or maternity benefits payable to him (i), and if the sum so standing to his credit becomes exhausted his rights to benefits are suspended, save that his right to medical and sanatorium benefits continues to the end of the then current year, or longer if the insurance committee administering those benefits (k) has funds available for the purpose and sees fit to allow him to continue to receive them (l). Moreover, certain sums are deducted each year from the amount standing to the deposit contributor's credit for the expenses of medical and sanatorium benefits and the expenses of administration, and if the sum standing to his credit is insufficient to meet those sums, he is only entitled during the year to those benefits to which the insurance committee may consent (m).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Benefits not Assignable.

1651. Benefits under the foregoing provisions relating to health insurance are inalienable to the same extent as unemployment benefit (n).

SECT. 7.—Exemptions from Stamp Duty.

1652. Stamp duty is not chargeable upon the following documents in connexion with national health insurance business, namely:—any draft, or order, or receipt given by or to an approved society, or branch, or insurance committee in respect of money payable in pursuance of the statutory provisions relating to national health insurance or of the rules of the society or branch; any letter or power of attorney granted by any person as trustee for the transfer of any money of an approved society, or branch, or insurance committee invested in his name in the public funds; any bond or other security given to, by, or on account of an approved society or branch, or by the treasurer or other official thereof; any appointment or revocation of appointment of agent, or other document required or authorised by or in SECT. 8.—Administrative Bodies.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Insurance Commissioners.

Appointment and powers.

1653. The central administration of national health insurance in England (p) is in the hands of the Insurance Commissioners, a body appointed by the Treasury. One Commissioner at least must be a duly qualified medical practitioner (q). The Insurance Commissioners appoint the necessary officers, inspectors (r), referees, and servants, subject to the approval of the Treasury as to numbers and remuneration (s). The Insurance Commissioners may sue and be sued in that name; they have an official seal which is officially and judicially noticed, and every document purporting to be their duly sealed or signed order or other instrument is deemed to be their order or instrument without further proof, unless the contrary is shown, and is received in evidence (t).

The power of the Insurance Commissioners to make regulations is subject to the provision that any such regulations shall be laid before Parliament, and either House may within twenty-one days present an address to His Majesty praying for the annulment of any such regulation (u).

Baggallay, Hurlock v. Shinn*, [1913] 1 K. B. 290). By the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 78, and the National Insurance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 40 (2), the Insurance Commissioners are given powers, until the 31st December, 1914, under which they may, by orders made with the consent of the Treasury, do anything which appears to them necessary or expedient for bringing the provisions relating to national health insurance into operation, "and any such order may modify the provisions of this Act, so far as may appear necessary or expedient for carrying the order into effect."

Administrative Bodies.

1655. For the purpose of securing for themselves advice and assistance in regard to the making and altering of regulations, the Insurance Commissioners must appoint an advisory committee, and must include among its members representatives of associations of employers and approved societies, medical practitioners, and at least two women (c).

Advisory committee.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Insurance Committees.

1656. An insurance committee must be constituted for every county and county borough (d). The number of the members of the various committees is determined by the Insurance Commissioners, but within maximum and minimum limits of eighty and forty respectively. Three-fifths of the committee are appointed in accordance with regulations of the Insurance Commissioners so as to secure representation of insured persons who are members of approved societies (e), and who are deposit contributors (f), in proportion to their respective numbers (g); one-fifth are appointed by the council of the county or county borough, and of such members two at least must be women; two members are elected by the medical practitioners resident in the county or county borough; one member (or two if the committee is sixty or upwards, or three if eighty) must be a duly qualified medical practitioner appointed by the council of the county or county borough; and the remaining members are appointed by the Insurance Commissioners, one at least being a duly qualified medical practitioner and two at least being women (a). Where the county or county borough defrays any part of the cost of medical benefit (b) or sanatorium benefit (c), its representation may be increased, and that of insured persons correspondingly diminished (d). Insurance committees may combine, and the Insurance Commissioners may require them to combine, for all or any of the purposes of national health insurance (e); and they may subscribe to the funds of any association of insurance committees whose objects are approved by the Insurance Commissioners (f). The Insurance Commissioners may make regulations governing the appointment, procedure, and proceedings of the committees, including the appointment of sub-committees consisting wholly or partly of members of the committee (g), but at least one woman must be on every sub-committee for dealing with the administration of any benefit (h).

For the purpose of assisting insurance committees in the exercise and performance of their powers and duties, and with a view to promoting co-operation between the committees and county, borough and district councils, any medical officer of health may be requested to attend meetings of the committee, subject to the consent of the council by whom he is appointed (i).

Expenses.

Members of insurance committees may be paid travelling expenses (k), subsistence allowance, and compensation for loss of remunerative time (l), and representative members, not exceeding contributors (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 59 (2) (i)). 1657. In addition to the administration of medical (o) and sanatorium benefits (p), and, in the case of insured persons who are not members of approved societies (q), sickness, disablement, and maternity benefits (r), an insurance committee has the following powers and duties, namely (s):—it must make such provision as it thinks necessary or desirable for the giving of lectures and the publication of information on questions relating to health, and for that purpose may make arrangements with local education authorities (t), universities, and other institutions; it must make such reports as to the health of insured persons within the county or county borough as the Insurance Commissioners, after consultation with the Local Government Board, may proscribe, and it must furnish such statistical and other returns as they may require. It may also make such other reports as to the health of such insured persons and the conditions affecting the same as it may think fit, and may add suggestions with regard thereto. The reports and returns must be such as will enable an analysis and classification of deposit contributors (a) to be made. Copies of such reports, returns and suggestions are forwarded by the Insurance Commissioners to the county, borough (b), and district councils concerned or affected (c).

SUB-SECT. 3.—District Insurance Committees.

1658. The regulations which the Insurance Commissioners may make concerning insurance committees (d) must include provisions requiring the insurance committee of every county, save where special circumstances make it unnecessary, to prepare and submit for approval to the Commissioners, after consultation with the county council, a scheme for the appointment of district insurance committees for the county, and prescribing the area to be assigned to each. In particular, the scheme must provide for a district insurance committee for each borough, including the City of London and the metropolitan boroughs, within the county having a population of not less than 10,000, and for each urban district within the county with a population of not less than 20,000.

Adjoining areas may be grouped with any such borough (outside London) or urban district for the purpose of the appointment of a district insurance committee (e). Regulations may be made by the Insurance Commissioners providing for the apportionment among the several district insurance committees of any of the powers and duties of the insurance committee as well as providing for the constitution of such district insurance committees and for their relations to the insurance committee and to one another (f).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Local Committees.

Medical Practitioners.

1659. The Insurance Commissioners must recognise such local medical committees as have been formed for any county or county borough or district committee area, and are representative of the duly qualified medical practitioners resident in the area. Local medical committees so recognised must, subject to regulations made by the Insurance Commissioners, be consulted by the insurance committee or district committee, as the case may be, on all general questions affecting the administration of medical benefit, including the arrangements made with medical practitioners attending and treating insured persons (g), and have such other

(f) Ibid. The provisions to be included in the scheme are prescribed in the National Health Insurance (District Insurance Committees) Regulations (England), 1913 (Stat. R. & O., 1913, p. 944), by which it is laid down that there is to be on the district committee a majority of representatives of insured persons in the area, also at least two women, and persons appointed by each of the following bodies, namely:—(i.) the insurance committee; (ii.) the council of every borough, urban district, or rural district whose area is included in that of the district committee; (iii.) any association of approved societies or any class of approved societies which, in the opinion of the committee, is representative of the insured persons or classes of insured persons resident in the area of the district committee; (iv.) any local medical committee recognised by the Commissioners under the Act which has been formed for any area including or corresponding to that of the district committee; (v.) any association of deposit contributors which has been formed for any area including that of the district committee; (vi.) any committee, representative of chemists and other persons, firms and bodies corporate undertaking the supply of drugs, medicines and appliances under the arrangements made by the committee to insured persons in the area of the district committee. The following powers and duties may not be assigned or delegated to the district committee, namely:—(a) the completion of arrangements for the treatment of tuberculosis and other prescribed diseases; (b) negotiations with approved societies in respect of the cost of the medical benefit of their members resident in the county and of the administration thereof; (c) the determination of the amount to be paid in respect of the cost of the medical benefit of deposit contributors; (d) the decision of the terms on which medical practitioners are to be invited to undertake treatment and of the method and amount of their remuneration; (e) the determination of the method and amount of the remuneration of persons, firms and bodies corporate undertaking the supply of drugs, medicines and appliances.

(g) See p. 946, post. The insurance committee must consult with the local medical committee in conjunction with the panel committee (see note (i), p. 937, post) before determining the conditions of service and remuneration of medical practitioners undertaking the treatment of persons entitled to powers and duties as the Insurance Commissioners may determine (h).

Where it is the duty of an insurance committee, under either the statutory provisions or the statutory regulations relating to national health insurance, to ascertain, in respect of any matter affecting the administration of medical benefit in the area, the opinions and wishes of the medical practitioners on its panel, it must do so through a committee appointed by such practitioners in accordance with regulations. Such committees have such powers and duties as the Commissioners determine (i).

A local committee must be elected in every county or county borough by the persons, firms, and bodies corporate who have agreed to supply drugs, medicines and appliances to insured persons. Such committee must be consulted by the insurance committee on all general questions affecting such supply. It performs such duties and exercises such powers as the Insurance Commissioners determine, and is elected in accordance with regulations made by those Commissioners (h).

persons who are members thereof (a). Other administrative functions are also imposed upon approved societies in respect of their members, notably in regard to the issue and collection of insurance cards (b).

Conditions
of approval.

1662. Any body of persons corporate or unincorporate (not being a branch (c) of another such body) registered or established under any Act of Parliament, or by Royal Charter, or, if not so registered or established, having a constitution of the prescribed character (d), may be approved by the Insurance Commissioners for the purposes of national health insurance (e), provided that it fulfils the following conditions, namely:—it must not be a society carried on for profit; its constitution must provide for its affairs being subject to the absolute control of its members, whether insured persons or not; and, if the society has honorary members, its constitution must provide for excluding them from the right of voting on questions relating to national health insurance (f).

Any society may establish a separate section, consisting of insured persons, whether with or without honorary members not being insured persons, for the purposes of national health insurance, and such separate section may become an approved society in the manner and subject to the conditions aforesaid (g).

Approval may be granted at any time and either unconditionally or subject to the condition of the society taking the steps necessary for compliance with the foregoing requirements relating to approved societies (h).

A society may not be required to be approved in respect of any part of the United Kingdom other than that in which its registered office is situated because among its members there are persons for the time being resident in that part of the United Kingdom (i).

(a) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 14 (1). In other cases these benefits are administered by the insurance committees, as to which see pp. 933 et seq., ante.

(b) See note (a), p. 918, ante.

(c) The expression "branch," in relation to a society, does not include any branch of the society which is not itself separately registered (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 79).

(d) The National Insurance (Constitution of Unregistered Societies) Regulation, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 948), requires that societies not so registered or established shall be regulated by written or printed rules or by some other instrument providing for certain specified matters relative to their constitution, powers, and procedure.

The Insurance Commissioners may withdraw their approval, so that the society will cease to be an approved society, if such society or a branch thereof fails to comply with the statutory provisions relating to approved societies, or if the society or branch or the parent body of a separate section is convicted of any offence under any statute (k). They may also make regulations authorising the withdrawal of approval on account of maladministration of the society's national health insurance affairs where it appears expedient in the interests of the members of the society to do so (a).

of approval.

1663. Every approved society and every society desirous of becoming an approved society must give such security as the Insurance Commissioners think sufficient to provide against malversation or misappropriation of national health insurance funds by officers of the society. Security must also be given by an approved society in respect of any branches which it may have with insured persons among their members. No security is required from any society which proves that the only national health insurance funds coming into its hands are such as are required for reimbursing to the society sums previously expended (b).

Security.

1664. Approved societies and their branches must comply with any regulations made by the Insurance Commissioners as to their place of meeting, and such regulations may provide for the use, for that purpose, of the offices of a Government department (including a labour exchange), or of a local authority, subject to the consent of the department or authority concerned (c).

Regulations.

1665. Every approved society must make proper rules to the satisfaction of the Insurance Commissioners for the government of the society. If the society has branches, rules must be made for the government of the society and its branches, for the determination of disputes between the society and a branch or between branches, for the administration of benefits by the branches in regard to their insured members, for the keeping of proper accounts by the branches where separate accounts are usually kept by them, and for depriving of or suspending from the right of administering benefits any branch guilty of maladministration thereof, or which is convicted of any offence under any statute, and for providing for members.

1666. A member of an approved society who is a minor may execute instruments and give acquittances under the rules of the society, but may not be a member of the committee, or a trustee, manager, or treasurer thereof (f).

Dissolution.

1667. An approved society or a branch thereof may only be dissolved with the sanction of the Insurance Commissioners and in the prescribed manner (g); and no branch may be expelled from the society unless proper provision is made with respect to its members who are insured persons. No branch having insured persons among its members may secede or withdraw from the society without the consent of the Insurance Commissioners; such consent is not given unless the branch complies with the conditions of approval requisite in the case of approved societies. On such consent being given the branch is subject to all provisions and requirements relating to approved societies. Such consent is unnecessary if the branch makes satisfactory provision for the transfer of its insured members to other branches or other approved societies (h).

Inspection of affairs.

1668. The Insurance Commissioners may empower any inspector appointed by them to exercise in respect of any approved society or branch of an approved society the powers of an inspector appointed under s. 76 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (i), for the purpose of inspecting the affairs of a society, but any complaint or report as to any branch made by an inspector under this provision must be communicated to the central body of the society (j).

of persons employed by one or more employers may become an approved society, notwithstanding that the employer is entitled to representation on the body administering the fund to, an extent not exceeding one quarter of the total number of the body, if the employer, in addition to the insurance contributions payable by him (k), is responsible for the solvency of the fund or for the benefits payable thereout, or is liable to pay a substantial part of, or to make substantial contributions to, or substantially to supplement the benefits payable out of the fund. The following are the conditions of approval in respect of such a society, namely:—it must be prohibited, so far as concerns national health insurance benefits, from refusing to allow a member to transfer to another approved society, and from refusing to allow a member who is discharged from or leaves his employment and is unable to join another approved society on account of his health to continue his membership; the members of the committee of management, other than the employer's representatives, must be elected by ballot; and membership of the society must not be a condition of employment. Where in order to become an approved society it is necessary to alter the existing rules or constitution of the society, and it is not competent, under the existing constitution, for the alteration to be made, the Insurance Commissioners may approve a scheme submitted to them for the purpose, provided that the members have had an opportunity of voting thereon by ballot, and that proper provision has been made for safeguarding existing rights and interests. The Act or deed constituting the fund has effect subject to the provisions of the scheme approved (l).

1673. The Commissioners may make regulations as to the manner in and conditions upon which may be effected the amalgamation for national health insurance purposes of any two or more approved societies, or of an approved society with a society which is not an approved society, or of any branches of an approved society; and as to the transfer by one approved society or branch of its engagements as to health insurance, or such of its engagements as relate to members resident in a particular part of the United Kingdom, to another approved society or branch (u).

1674. Any insured person (w) and any person entitled to become an insured person may apply to an approved society for membership therein (a). No such application may be refused solely on the ground of the applicant's age, and a society may not admit as a member any person resident in any part of the United Kingdom in respect of which the society is not an approved society (b); but otherwise an approved society is entitled, in accordance with its rules, to admit or reject any applicant, or to expel any member who is an insured person (c). Their contributions are credited to a special fund called the Deposit Contributors Fund and their benefits are paid out of that fund (l) and administered by the insurance committees (m).

But if, before the expiration of the time within which a person may by virtue of the foregoing provisions join an approved society, any person (a) makes a claim for benefit under the Act, or (b) dies or ceases permanently to reside in the United Kingdom, or otherwise ceases to be an insured person, or (c) being a woman, becomes suspended from benefits on marriage, the time expiring on the day immediately preceding the day on which the claim is made, or the day of that person's death, or the day on which that person so ceased to reside in the United Kingdom, or to be an insured person, or the day of that person's marriage, as the case may be, is deemed to have been the time allowed in the case of that person for joining an approved society, instead of the time which would otherwise have been allowed (National Health Insurance, (Time for Joining an Approved Society) Regulations, 1914 (Stat. R. & O., 1914, No. 415)). As to the position of insured persons who, owing to misapprehension, purported to become members of societies which had not been approved for that part of the United Kingdom in which such persons were then resident, with the result that such admissions to membership were, strictly speaking, inoperative, see the National Health Insurance (Membership of Approved Societies) Order, 1913 (Stat. 1678. Subject to statutory provisions relating to national health insurance and to the consent of the Insurance Commissioners, approved societies may provide for the application of their existing rules, or make new rules, or alter or repeal their rules with regard to the following matters, namely (q) :—the manner and time of paying or distributing, and mode of calculating, benefits; the suspension of benefits (but no rule may provide for the suspension of any benefit for a period exceeding one year); notices and proof of disease or disablement (r); behaviour during disease or disablement (but any such rule must be in the prescribed form (s)); the visiting of sick or disabled persons (but when visitors are appointed by the society, every such rule must provide that women are to be visited by women); and the infliction and enforcement of penalties, whether by fine, suspension of benefits or otherwise, in the case of members who are insured persons and who are guilty of any breach of rules or of imposition or attempted imposition in regard to benefits. No fine may exceed 10s., or, for repeated breaches of rules, 20s.; no penalty may be imposed on account of the insured person's refusal to submit to vaccination (t) or inoculation of any kind, or to a surgical operation unless such operation is of a minor character and the refusal is considered unreasonable (a) by the society or by the Insurance Commissioners on appeal, and suspension of maternity benefit may not be inflicted as a penalty where the wife whose confinement is concerned has not herself been guilty of the offence for which the penalty is imposed. Where, under any rule, sickness or disablement benefit is suspended on the ground that the disease or disablement has been caused by the misconduct of the person claiming the benefit, such person cannot become thereby disentitled to medical benefit (b).

(r) Where a rule provided for payment of sickness benefit only on a medical certificate of incapacity, it was held that an approved society had no right to limit by resolution the certificates which it would accept to those of doctors on the panel (Heard v. Pickthorne, [1913] 3 K. B. 299, C. A.). Where it was provided by rules that no member should be entitled to sickness benefit until he had sent to the society a medical certificate of the cause of incapacity, and that disputes should be settled by a delegates' meeting, in a dispute as to the sufficiency of a medical certificate, a county court has no jurisdiction (Bailey v. Co-operative Wholesale Society (Insurance Section), [1914] 2 K. B. 233).

Where there is a statutory requirement that the rules of a society becoming an approved society are to be registered, any rules approved by the Insurance Commissioners must forthwith be registered, and in the meantime have effect as if duly registered (c).

The Commissioners have power to make regulations enabling approved societies and insurance committees to appoint a person to exercise on behalf of any insured person of unsound mind any right of election which that person has in regard to national health insurance, and to appoint a person to receive on behalf of and for the benefit of such person any sums by way of benefit which would otherwise have been payable to him (f).

committee must, in accordance with regulations made by the Insurance Commissioners (j), make arrangements with duly qualified medical practitioners (k) and make provision for the supply of proper and sufficient drugs, medicines, and the prescribed appliances (l).

The regulations must provide for the arrangements being made subject to the approval of the Insurance Commissioners (m), and must secure that insured persons shall, unless it is otherwise provided, receive adequate medical attendance and treatment from the medical practitioners with whom arrangements are made, and be able to obtain such drugs, medicines and appliances as the medical practitioner in attendance may order, from any persons, firms, or bodies corporate with whom arrangements have been made (n).

(ii.) *Medical Attendance.*Panel of practitioners.

1682. With regard to medical attendance and treatment, the regulations must provide for a system which will secure the preparation and publication of lists of medical practitioners who have agreed to attend and treat insured persons whose medical benefit is administered by the committee; a right on the part of any duly qualified medical practitioner of being included in such a list, subject to the power of removal from the list by the Insurance Commissioners in the interests of the efficiency of the medical service of the insured; a right on the part of any insured person of being attended and treated by the practitioner whom he selects from the appropriate list, subject to the consent of the practitioner so selected; and the distribution amongst the several practitioners on the lists of insured persons who have failed to make any selection, or who have been refused by their selected practitioner, such distribution, so far as practicable, to be arranged by the several practitioners (o).

The National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, provide as follows:—Approved societies must supply to the insurance committee lists of their members resident in the county or county borough, and the committee must prepare therefrom a list of members of societies and further lists of deposit contributors and exempt persons, these lists being collectively known as the "Register" (ibid., regulation 3). After consultation with the local medical committee and panel committee (see pp. 936, 937, ante) the insurance committee must embody in draft agreements and submit to the Commissioners for approval the conditions of service of medical practitioners included in its panels (ibid., regulations 4, 5), and for the purpose of providing treatment for insured persons must enter into written agreements with such practitioners as are willing to treat insured persons on those terms. Every draft agreement must include among the conditions of service the following points (ibid., Sched. I.) :—the practitioner must give the patients treatment "of a kind which can consistently with the best interests of the patient be properly undertaken by a general practitioner of ordinary professional competence and skill," but he may not be required to give or charge for treatment in respect of a confinement, or (unless the practitioner agrees to give domiciliary treatment) of tuberculosis or any other disease in regard to which the patient is entitled to sanatorium benefit; where the patient requires treatment beyond the competence of an ordinary practitioner, the practitioner must advise the patient how to obtain the necessary treatment; where the patient's condition so requires, the practitioner must visit him at his residence or at any other place within the county or county borough within a definite distance from the practitioner's residence; the practitioner must attend at specified places and times and treat patients who attend there for the purpose; the drugs and appliances necessary for any patient must be ordered by the practitioner in the form provided by the insurance committee, save those which the practitioner may be under arrangement himself to supply (see note (d), p. 951, post); the practitioner must give personal treatment save where prevented by urgency of other professional duties, temporary absence from home, or other reasonable cause, when he must provide a deputy; and the practitioner must keep the required records of cases. The insurance committee may recover from the practitioner any sum of which it has been deprived which otherwise it would have received for medical benefit or any expense incurred by the committee or by any patient by reason of the medical practitioner's breach of agreement, but before so doing the matter must be referred to the medical service sub-committee (see infra). Every draft agreement must also include one of the following methods of remuneration, namely: a rate per quarter in respect of each person included in the practitioner's list (the "capitation system"); the capitation system plus special rates for certain specified special services; the capitation system plus certain rates for all services; specified rates for special services plus the capitation system; or payment at certain specified rates for the various different services rendered ("payment by attendance"). The committee may combine any of these methods of remuneration. Remuneration to practitioners is paid out of the Practitioners Fund (see note (b), p. 959, post) (National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, regulations 35, 36). As to the calculation of remuneration, see ibid. For the treatment of temporary residents there is a special scale payable out of a special fund established by the Commissioners, called the Central Medical Benefit Fund (ibid., regulations 41, 42). If a question arises or may arise whether an operation or other service is comprised in the treatment which the practitioner has by his agreement undertaken to give, it is referred by the practitioner to the local medical committee, and in the event of disagreement between that body and the insurance committee the matter is referred to referees (ibid., regulation 50). The committee may agree to additional payments in respect of mileage (ibid., regulation 77). The committee may compile the "medical list," which consists of the practitioners who have entered into agreements with the committee and who are collectively known as "the panel" (ibid., regulation 6). If a practitioner (other than one whose name has been removed from any "medical list") at any time applies to the committee for that purpose, the committee must include him in the "medical list." Ordinarily, a practitioner who desires to withdraw from the panel must give written notice four weeks before the commencement of any year. Any person acting in the interests of the estate of a deceased practitioner on the panel may be authorised by the committee to appoint temporarily a practitioner to treat insured persons on the deceased practitioner's list (ibid., regulation 17). Their rights in regard to medical treatment must be brought to the notice of insured persons by the publication in local newspapers of the arrangements made by the committee (ibid., regulation 15). Insured persons, other than those required or allowed to make their own arrangements for treatment (see p. 949, post), are entitled to obtain treatment either from a practitioner on the panel or through an approved institution (see pp. 949, 950, post) (ibid., regulation 20). In the former case, insured persons desiring and being entitled to select a practitioner 1683. Provision for medical attendance and treatment must also be made, on the same terms as to remuneration as those arranged for insured persons, for the benefit of such members of any friendly society which, or a separate section of which, becomes an approved society (p), as were members thereof on the 16th December, 1911, and are not entitled to medical benefit (q), by reason of being of the age of sixty-five or upwards on the 15th July, 1912, or are not qualified to become insured persons by reason of permanent disablement, at the same date (r). Such provision must be made, in like manner and subject to the like conditions, for the benefit of members of societies, other than the foregoing friendly societies, who were on the 16th December, 1911, entitled as such members to medical attendance and treatment (s).

arrangements.

1684. If the medical service in any area is inadequate, the Commissioners may dispense with the necessity of adopting any such system as aforesaid and themselves make other arrangements or authorise the insurance committee so to do, or may pay to insured persons a sum equal to the estimated cost of medical benefit in lieu of medical benefit, money payable to the committee in respect of medical benefit being applied for that purpose (t). If the Insurance Commissioners are satisfied that the insured persons or any apply to the chosen practitioner, and the latter intimates to the insurance committee whether the applicant is accepted or rejected by him (National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, regulation 21). Lists of persons accepted by or assigned to each practitioner on the panel are forwarded to the practitioner, and he will be responsible for their treatment (ibid., regulation 25). An insured person desiring to change his medical attendant during the course of a year, while in the same area, can only do so by agreement with his present practitioner, and notice of the transfer must be given to the committee by the practitioner to whose list the insured person is transferred (ibid., regulation 26). As to the transfer of insured persons whose medical practitioner dies, or ceases practice, or withdraws from the list, see ibid. An insured person desiring to change his practitioner or his method of treatment during the succeeding year must give notice of such desire before the 1st December (ibid., regulation 30). As to arrangements on the temporary removal of insured persons, see ibid., regulation 27; and as to persons frequently removing, ibid., regulation 78. Change of address by an insured person entitled to medical benefit must be notified to his society or, if a deposit contributor, to the Insurance Commissioners (ibid., regulation 28). Every insurance committee must establish a special "medical service sub-committee" for the investigation of questions arising between insured persons and their medical attendants (ibid., regulation 45). If representations are made to the Commissioners by an insurance committee or a local medical committee or panel committee that the continuance of a practitioner on the panel will be prejudicial to the efficiency of the medical service of insured persons, the Commissioners must, and in the case of similar representations by other persons or bodies may, hold an inquiry in regard thereto in the manner prescribed (ibid., regulations 52-74).

The regulations must also authorise the insurance committee to require any persons whose income exceeds a limit to be fixed by the insurance committee, and to allow any other persons, to make their own arrangements for receiving medical attendance and treatment, including medicines and appliances, in lieu of receiving medical benefit under such arrangements as aforesaid. In such cases the committee contributes towards the cost of medical attendance and treatment amounts not exceeding those which otherwise would have been expended by the committee in providing medical benefit for the persons in question (a).

The insurance committee may exempt from the necessity of making their own arrangements by reason of the income limit any persons or class of persons who ought, in the opinion of the committee, to be so exempted. The local medical committee and panel and pharmaceutical committees (see note (i), p. 937, ante) must be consulted in regard to the fixing or varying of the income limit. Persons with incomes above the income limit who are not exempted are not entitled to medical benefit under the arrangements made by the insurance committee (see the text, supra), and persons or bodies interested may, by notice to the committee, dispute the right of any insured person to receive medical benefit under those arrangements, and if the insured person fails to satisfy the committee that his income does not exceed the limit or that he is entitled to exemption, or that, being an exempt person, his income does not exceed £160 a year, the committee must require him to make his own arrangements (National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, regulation 14). Insured persons desiring or being required to make their own arrangements must apply to the committee (ibid., regulation 24). As to exchanging methods of treatment, see note (a) p. 946, ante. If the committee considers the arrangements made by a person making his own arrangements are satisfactory, a contribution is made towards the cost of that treatment out of the Special Arrangements Fund (see note (b), p. 959, post) (National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, regulation 44). As to the calculation of such contribution, see ibid.

(iii.) Supply of Drugs.

drugs etc.

1886. With regard to the supply of drugs, medicines and appliances, the regulations must require the adoption by every insurance committee of such a system as will secure the preparation and publication of lists of persons, firms and bodies corporate who have agreed to undertake such supply according to a scale of prices fixed by the committee, and a right to any person, firm, or body corporate of being included in any such list for such purpose, provided that such inclusion would not be prejudicial to the service(c). No arrangement may be made with a medical

(b) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 15 (4). The board of management of or person administering any such institution may apply to the committee for approval; the committee must consider the application and then communicate with the Commissioners; the Commissioners may approve any institution approved by the committee; such approval has effect subject to the observance by the institution of conditions imposed by the Commissioners (National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, regulation 13). Insured persons desiring or being entitled to treatment through an approved institution must apply in the prescribed manner to the institution, and the institution notifies the committee as to acceptance or rejection of the application (ibid., regulation 23). Moneys for the benefit of persons obtaining treatment through an approved institution come out of the Institutions Fund; see ibid., regulation 43; note (b), p. 959, post.

(c) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 15 (5) (a), (b). The National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, prescribe the medical and surgical appliances to be provided as part of medical benefit (ibid., regulation 7, Sched. II.). The insurance committee, after consultation with the local medical committee (see pp. 936, 937, ante), the panel committee (see note (i), p. 937, ante), and the pharmaceutical committee (see note (k), p. 937, ante), must prepare "the drug tariff," or a list of the prices upon which the sums to be paid for drugs and appliances are to be calculated. Such prices and the prescribed conditions of supply must after consultation with the pharmaceutical committee be embodied in draft agreements, which must be submitted to the Commissioners for approval, and must include (subject to any necessary modifications), among others, the following conditions:—drugs and appliances of good quality must be supplied free of charge to persons presenting the necessary prescribed order signed by a medical practitioner on the panel or his deputy; substances to which the Poisons and Pharmacy Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 5, or the Regulations under the Pharmacy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121), s. 1, relate, must be provided with proper bottles and other vessels; and dispensing must be done by or under the direct supervision of a registered pharmacist or a person who for three years immediately prior to the 16th December, 1911, has acted as dispenser to a medical practitioner or a public institution. The insurance committee must enter into written agreements on those terms with chemists and others willing to undertake the supply of drugs or appliances or both, and must then prepare a list of those with whom such agreements have been made (National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, regulations 8—11, 22, Sched. III.). Moneys for drugs and appliances are practitioner unless authorised by regulations (d), under which he will supply drugs or medicines to any insured person (e); and, subject to regulations to the contrary, arrangements for the dispensing of medicines may only be made with persons, firms, or bodies corporate entitled to carry on the business of a chemist and druggist under the Pharmacy Act, 1868 (f), as amended by the Poisons and Pharmacy Act, 1908 (g), who undertake that all medicines supplied by them to insured persons shall be dispensed by or under the direct supervision of a registered pharmacist (h), or by a person who, for three years immediately prior to the 16th December, 1911, has acted as a dispenser to a duly qualified medical paid out of the Drug Fund; see ibid., regulation 39; note (b), p. 959, post. Cases where there has been alleged excessive ordering of drugs by any practitioner may be investigated by the panel committee, and, if the charge is established, deductions in respect thereof may be made from the amount payable to the practitioner out of the Panel Fund (National Health Insurance (Medical Benefit) Regulations (England), 1913, regulation 40). As to revision of the drug tariff, see ibid., regulation 18. The insurance committee must include in the list any person supplying drugs or appliances who applies for that purpose. A person may withdraw from the list on giving four weeks' notice before the commencement of any year, or at any other time by agreement with the committee (ibid., regulation 19). Every chemist or other person on the list must exhibit at his place of business a notice in the form prescribed in ibid., Sched. IV., indicating that he has undertaken to supply drugs etc. under the aforesaid arrangements (ibid., regulation 11). The insurance committee must constitute a pharmaceutical service sub-committee for dealing with complaints against persons supplying drugs or appliances (ibid., regulations 46, 49). The insurance committee must furthermore constitute a joint services sub-committee consisting of members appointed by and from the medical service sub-committee, the pharmaceutical service sub-committee, and the insurance committee itself. One member must be a woman. If a matter referred to the medical service sub-committee involves a question relating to a person supplying drugs, or if a matter referred to the pharmaceutical service sub-committee involves a question relating to a practitioner on the panel, such matter is to be referred to the joint services sub-committee (ibid., regulation 47). For the purpose of holding an inquiry as to whether the inclusion or continuance of a person supplying drugs or appliances on the list is or would be prejudicial to the efficiency of the service, the Commissioners must constitute an inquiry committee in the manner prescribed (ibid., regulations 75—76).

(d) Where an insured person resides in a rural area more than one mile from the place of business of the nearest chemist on the list, or by reason of distance or inadequacy of means of communication has difficulty in obtaining drugs and appliances from a chemist on the list, arrangements may be, and if the practitioner so desires are to be, made whereby his medical practitioner supplies him instead. Moreover, arrangements must be made by the insurance committee for the supply by practitioners on the panel of all or any of the drugs necessarily or ordinarily administered by a practitioner in person and of the drugs and appliances required for immediate administration or application, or required for use before a supply can conveniently be obtained otherwise (ibid., regulation 12). In such cases the committee may, instead of paying him for the drugs and appliances actually supplied, pay to the practitioner a capitation fee from the Drug Fund (ibid., regulations 38, 39).

practitioner or a public institution (i); but the rights and privileges of a person under the Apothecaries Act, 1815 (k), to act as assistant to an apothecary in compounding and dispensing medicines are not affected (l).

If the Commissioners are satisfied that the fixed rate of prices is reasonable, but that an adequate and convenient supply of drugs, medicines, and appliances is not secured in any area, they may dispense with the necessity of any such system as aforesaid and authorise the committee to make, subject to approval, other arrangements (m).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Sanatorium Benefit.

Arrangements
by insurance committees.

1687. Sanatorium benefit (n) is administered by and through the insurance committees (o). For that purpose insurance committees must make arrangements, to the satisfaction of the Insurance Commissioners, with a view to providing treatment for insured persons suffering from tuberculosis or any such other diseases as the Local Government Board with the approval of the Treasury may appoint (p), firstly, in sanatoria and other institutions, and, secondly, otherwise than in sanatoria or other institutions (q).

For the purpose of such treatment insurance committees must arrange with persons or local authorities (other than poor law authorities) having the management of sanatoria or other institutions approved by the Local Government Board; a local authority may provide such treatment as respects insured persons resident outside as well as within their area (r).

Provision of

The Metropolitan Asylums Board (see title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., p. 411) may agree with local authorities to receive insured persons and their dependants into hospitals or sanatoria provided by the Board (National Insurance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 39). In Wales the Welsh Insurance Commissioners are substituted for the Local Government Board as the approving authority (ibid., s. 42 (1)).

(s) See National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 64 (1). By the Finance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 48), s. 16 (1), the sum of £1,500,000 was made available for this purpose. The Welsh Insurance Commissioners distribute the part of the grant apportioned to Wales (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 82 (3); see also ibid., s. 82 (4), and, as to agreements between local authorities and King Edward the Board may authorise the county council to provide and maintain any such institution (t). Any expenses of the county council not defrayed out of the grant are defrayed out of the county fund (u). To facilitate co-operation amongst local authorities for the provision of such sanatoria and other institutions the Local Government Board may, by order, provide for the constitution of joint committees or boards for the joint exercise of powers in relation thereto (w).

SECT. 9.
The Administration of Benefits.

1689. For the purpose of treatment outside sanatoria or other institutions, insurance committees must arrange with persons and local authorities, other than poor law authorities, undertaking such treatment in a manner approved by the Local Government Board; and the Local Government Board may authorise a local authority to undertake such treatment and, if necessary, to appoint officers for the purpose (a).

Treatment
sanatoria.

1690. An insurance committee may, with the consent of the Insurance Commissioners, enter into agreements with any person or authority, other than a poor law authority, that, in consideration of treatment being provided in a sanatorium or other institution or otherwise for persons recommended by the committee for sanatorium benefit (b), the committee will contribute towards the maintenance of the institution or the provision of such treatment out of the funds available for sanatorium benefit (c). Any such agreement is binding on the committee and its successors. Any sums so payable by the committee may be paid by the Insurance Commissioners and deducted from any sums payable to the committee for sanatorium benefit (d).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Sickness and Disablement Benefit.(i.) Administration.

1692. Sickness benefit (g) and disablement benefit (h) are administered, in the case of insured persons who are members of an approved society (i), by and through the society or a branch thereof, and in other cases by and through the insurance committees (k).

1693. Where it is alleged by the Insurance Commissioners that there has been excessive sickness among any insured persons, or by any approved society (l) or insurance committee that there has been excessive sickness among the persons for the administration of whose sickness and disablement benefits the society or committee is responsible, and that such excess is due to the conditions or nature of the employment of such persons, or to bad housing or insanitary conditions in any locality, or to an insufficient or contaminated water supply, or to neglect to observe or enforce statutory provisions or regulations relating to the health of workers in factories, workshops (m), mines, quarries (n), or other industries, or relating to public health, or the housing of the working classes (o), or to observe or enforce any public health precautions, the Commissioners or the society or committee making such allegations, or the insurance committee on behalf and at the expense of any association of deposit contributors resident in its area (p), may send to the person or authority alleged to be in default a claim for the payment of any extra expenditure alleged to have been incurred by reason of such cause. Failing agreement on the subject, the Secretary of State (q) or the Local Government Board may order an inquiry and appoint for that purpose a competent person (r) with the same powers as those possessed by a Local Government Board inspector for the purposes of an inquiry under the Public Health Acts (s) and power to make orders as to costs. The order may include the costs of the Secretary of State and the Local Government Board, but a society or committee may not be ordered to pay the costs of the other party to the inquiry if the person holding the inquiry certifies that the demand for an inquiry was reasonable in the circumstances, and on such certificate being given the Treasury may repay to the society or committee all or any part of the costs incurred by it. An order made by the person holding the inquiry may, by leave of the High Court, be enforced in the same manner as a judgment or order of the court to the same effect (a).

1694. If at such inquiry it is proved that the amount of sickness has, during a period of not less than three years before the date of the inquiry, or, if there has been an outbreak of any epidemic, endemic, or infectious disease, during any less period, been more than 10 per cent. in excess of the average expectation of sickness as calculated in accordance with tables prepared by the Commissioners (b), and that such excess was wholly or in part due to any of the above-mentioned causes, the person holding the inquiry must order any extra expenditure incurred by societies or committees by reason of such cause to be made good by the responsible employer, local authority, owner, lessee, or occupier of premises, or, in the case of insufficient or contaminated water supply, by the local authority, company, or person responsible for supplying the water, unless such local authority, company, or person can prove that it is not in default (c).

or occupier, the latter may be ordered by the person holding the inquiry to repay such extra expenditure to the local authority (d).

1695. For the purposes of the provisions relating to excessive sickness, any expenditure on any benefit administered by an insurance committee is deemed expenditure of that committee, but any sum paid to any committee under those provisions to meet extra expenditure on sickness or disablement benefit is dealt with for the benefit of deposit contributors (e) in accordance with regulations made by the Commissioners (f). Where any sum is paid to the Insurance Commissioners under these provisions, they must apply it in discharging expenses incurred by them thereunder and distribute any balance among the societies and committees which have incurred extra expense through the excessive sickness (g).

Certificate of medical practitioner.

1696. Where the medical practitioner attending on any insured person in receipt of sickness benefit certifies that the levying of any distress (h) or execution (i) upon such person's goods or chattels on premises occupied by him, or the taking of any proceedings in ejectment (k), or for the recovery of any rent (l), or to enforce any judgment in ejectment against such person, would endanger his life, and such certificate has been sent to and recorded in the prescribed manner by the insurance committee (m), it is not lawful during the period named in the certificate for any person to levy any such distress or execution or to take any such proceedings against the insured person (n). A person knowingly contravening this provision is liable to a penalty, on summary conviction, not exceeding £50 (o).

The accuracy of the certificate may be disputed before the registrar of the county court, who may cancel or modify such certificate, and from his decision there is no appeal (p).

(m) The certificate is recorded in a special register without fee, and is open to inspection. Where so recorded, its genuineness may not be questioned in any proceedings against a sheriff or other officer for failure to levy any distress or execute any warrant. The committee is not obliged to record a certificate the genuineness of which it suspects (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 68 (4)).

protection.

1697. A certificate continues in force for one week or such less period as may be therein named, but may be renewed from time to time for any period not exceeding one week, but not beyond the expiration of three months from the date of the grant of the original certificate. Each renewal must be recorded by the insurance committee (r).

If the protection of such a certificate is to extend beyond one month from the date of the grant of the original certificate, the person desirous of taking proceedings may demand proper security for rent thereafter to become due from the insured person, or for the amount of the judgment debt, as the case may be. Any dispute as to the sufficiency of the security is determined by the registrar of the county court, whose decision is final (s).

SUB-SECT. 5. —Maternity Benefit.

1698. Maternity benefit (t) is administered, in the case of insured persons who are members of an approved society (a), by and through the society or a branch thereof, and in other cases by and through the insurance committees (b).

By whom administered.

1699. Maternity benefit is in every case the mother's benefit. Where it is payable in respect of the husband's insurance, the wife's receipt, or his receipt on her behalf, if authorised by her, is a sufficient discharge. If it is paid to the husband he must pay it to his wife (c). Where the mother is herself an insured person and is not the wife (or, in the case of a posthumous child, the widow) of an insured person, maternity benefit is administered in cash or otherwise as a benefit for her. In any other case the benefit is administered in the interests of the mother and child in cash or otherwise, and in respect of a posthumous child as if the husband were still alive (d).

Mother entitled to benefit.

The mother has liberty of choice whether she shall be attended by a duly qualified medical practitioner or by a duly certified midwife, and in the selection of either she has free choice (e).

1700. Where maternity benefit is given or paid to the husband, it becomes his duty to make adequate provision to the best of his power for the maintenance and care of his wife during her confinement and for four weeks after her delivery. For neglect or refusal to do so he is liable upon summary conviction to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding one month without prejudice to any other legal liability (f).

1701. The Insurance Commissioners may by special order provide for the reinsurance with them of the liabilities of all approved societies in respect of maternity benefit (g).

SUB-SECT. 6.—*Additional Benefits.*By whom administered.

1702. Additional benefits (h) are administered by the approved society or branch (i) of which the persons entitled thereto are members, except in cases where such benefits are in the nature of medical benefits (k), when they are administered by and through the insurance committees (l).

1703. Towards the cost of any of the aforesaid benefits, or the expenses of their administration or otherwise for the purposes of health insurance, Parliament may contribute such sums as may from time to time be determined, such contributions being herein referred to as additional sums. After such additional sums have been applied for the purpose for which they have been provided, the balance of the cost of the various benefits (m) and the expenses of their administration (n) are provided as to seven-ninths, or, in the case of women, three-fourths, from contributions of insured persons and their employers (o), and as to the remainder from moneys provided by Parliament (p). The council of any borough or urban or rural district may agree with the county council to repay to the latter the whole or any part of the sum payable by it towards the excess expenditure on medical or sanatorium benefit, so far as such excess is properly attributable to the borough or district. The agreement may provide that the county council is not, during the continuance of such agreement, to raise any sum on account of any expenditure incurred by it for the purpose to which the agreement relates within the borough or district the council of which has entered into such agreement (k).

Deposit
contributors.

1708. In regard to deposit contributors (l) there is payable annually a prescribed sum in respect of each deposit contributor towards the expenses incurred by the insurance committee in the administration of benefits (m), together with such sum as the insurance committee may, with the consent of the Insurance Commissioners, determine, in respect of each deposit contributor for the cost of medical benefit. The sums payable in respect of a deposit contributor for the purposes of medical and sanatorium benefits and towards administration expenses are deducted at the commencement of each year from the amount standing to his credit in the Deposit Contributors Fund (n), except so far as they are payable out of moneys provided by Parliament (o).

The purpose of this provision is to place all societies on an equal footing financially, notwithstanding the acceptance of insured persons of advanced age whose contributions are the same as in the case of younger men. Persons applying for membership of an approved society are, in effect, placed in all cases in the financial position of an applicant of the minimum age of sixteen, at which age no reserve value is necessary.

members who were employed contributors (i) exceeded three for every such member, there is paid to the society, or to the society on behalf of the branch, as the case may be, the proscribed amount for every week by which the aforesaid three contributions for each member was exceeded. The maximum so paid is the total amount lost to the society by reason of excusing the payment of that portion of the arrears of its members who are employed contributors which would have been payable by the employer had the members not been unemployed (k). Such payments are met out of the sums retained by the Insurance Commissioners for discharging their liabilities in respect of reserve values (l); but if the aggregate amount so payable in any year exceeds £100,000, the excess is paid out of moneys provided by Parliament (m).

1715. Any person convicted of knowingly making any false statement as to his age in any declaration made for the purpose of obtaining a reserve value in respect of him (a) is treated as if he had entered into insurance after the expiration of sixty-five weeks from the 15th July, 1912 (b), and the reserve value is cancelled (c).

Where an employed contributor (d) within five years from his entry into insurance ceases to be qualified as such and becomes a voluntary contributor (e), the difference between any reserve value credited to his approved society in respect of him and the reserve value, if any, which would have been so credited had he originally become a voluntary contributor is cancelled (f).

Regulations.

1719. Regulations must be made in regard to financial transactions between the Insurance Commissioners and the societies, and in particular providing for crediting to each society the contributions paid by or in respect of its members after deducting the amounts retained for discharging the Commissioners' liability in respect of reserve values (b); requiring the Commissioners, on carrying any sum to the credit of an approved society in the Investment Account, to pay over to the society for investment, or at its request to retain for investment on its behalf, four-sevenths, or so far as the sums are attributable to women one-half, of the amount so credited; providing for crediting to each society interest on the sums credited to it in the Investment Account (c); and providing for the discharge of debit balances, either by the reduction of reserve values, or out of the proceeds of the realisation of securities and the sums standing to the society's credit in the Investment Account proportionately. A society is, however, to be allowed to require that the whole amount shall remain to its credit in the Investment Account and no part be invested (d).

Approved societies must invest sums paid over for that purpose in trustee securities (e) or in securities issued by any local authority within the meaning of the Local Loans Act, 1875 (f), and charged on rates levied by or on the order or precept of such authority, or in any other securities approved by the Insurance Commissioners (g).

Financial Provisions.

Approved societies must apply interest or dividends on their investments towards the cost of the benefits of their members and of their administration, or otherwise, as the Commissioners may prescribe (i).

Approved societies and their branches are exempt from income tax in respect of income derived from their funds or credits or any investment thereof (j).

Sub-SECT. 4.—Transfer of Members.

1721. In the event of the transfer of a member of an approved society or a branch thereof to another society or branch thereof, or to another branch of the same society, there is transferred to such other society or branch in respect of him his "transfer value" calculated in accordance with tables prepared by the Insurance Commissioners. This provision does not apply in cases where the insured person left his society without the society's consent, such consent not having been unreasonably withheld (k).

Transfer value.

1722. If an insured person ceases to be permanently resident in the United Kingdom and becomes a member of any society or institution abroad approved by the Insurance Commissioners as being similar to an approved society, or of any branch of an approved society established outside the United Kingdom, his transfer value is to be paid to such society, institution or branch, provided that it gives corresponding rights to any of its members who become resident in the United Kingdom (l).

Persons
going abroad.

If a person who has for at least five years been a member of an approved society for the purposes of national health insurance has ceased permanently to reside in the United Kingdom, and does not join a similar society or institution or a branch abroad, his approved society may permit him, independently of the National Insurance Act, to remain a member and to become entitled to benefits, and may, subject to regulations, transfer from the account of the society under the provisions relating to national health insurance to the credit of the society independently of the Act the sum which would have been transferred to the Deposit Contributors Fund, and must cancel such reserve value as would have been cancelled (m).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Accounts and Audit.

1723. The Insurance Commissioners may make regulations in regard to the financial adjustments to be made on the amalgamation of societies or branches and on the transfer of the engagements of a society or branch in regard to national health insurance (o).

1724. Every approved society and every branch of an approved society must keep its books and accounts, so far as they relate to national health insurance, separate from all other books and accounts, and in the prescribed form (p), and submit them to audit by auditors appointed by the Treasury; such returns must also be rendered as the Insurance Commissioners may require (q). In accordance with the prescribed regulations (r), a separate account must be kept showing the amount expended on administration (s), and the amount which may be carried to that account out of contributions received is limited (t), any deficiency in such account, unless otherwise defrayed, being required to be met forthwith by a special levy (u).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Valuation of Assets.

(i.) Procedure.

1726. Every approved society and every branch of an approved society must submit to have its assets and liabilities, so far as they relate to national health insurance, valued; and, in the event of a surplus or deficiency being shown upon such valuation, must comply with certain statutory requirements in regard thereto (c).

Necessity for valuation.

Such valuation is made by a valuer (d) appointed by or with the approval of the Treasury, on a prescribed basis, at the end of every three years from the 15th July, 1912, or at such other times or intervals as the Insurance Commissioners may appoint (e). Regulations may be made by the joint committee of the several bodies of Commissioners as to the valuation of societies and branches which have members resident in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales or any two or three of such parts of the United Kingdom (f).

1727. If, upon the valuation of a branch of an approved society, a surplus is shown, there is transferred to the central authority of the society of which it is a branch one-third of the surplus, and the branch may, with the approval of the society, submit to the Insurance Commissioners a scheme for distributing out of the remaining two-thirds, together with any part of the surplus of the parent society which may be transferred to the branch (g), any one or more additional benefits (h). Subject to the foregoing provisions, any surplus in the central fund of the parent society, including any surplus transferred from its branches as above provided, is applied towards making good any deficiency shown by any of its branches (i), after which the society may distribute any surplus still remaining amongst such branches as have a surplus, in proportion to the amounts of such surpluses (k).

Financial Provisions.
Contents of scheme.

1728. A scheme made under the foregoing provisions must, so far as practicable, provide for loss or diminution of the additional benefits in the case of a member being in arrears (m), and may prescribe other conditions, including a corresponding reduction in the amount deemed to be arrears for the purpose of reckoning the rate of sickness benefit (n). If, after a scheme has been sanctioned, there is found to be a deficiency in the funds of the society or branch, additional benefits under the scheme must be suspended until the deficiency is extinguished and a surplus again shown (o).

No surplus may be applied to the payment of death benefits (p).

(iii.) Making Good Deficiency.

Provisions
in case of deficiency.

1729. If, upon a valuation, a deficiency is shown by a branch of an approved society, three-quarters or, if the society think fit, the whole thereof is, so far as possible, to be made good out of any surplus available for that purpose in the hands of the central authority of the society (q), but such assistance may be withheld, with the consent of the Commissioners, if the deficiency is due to "maladministration on the part of the branch in question (r).

scheme.

1730. If a society or branch shows a deficiency it must be made good, subject to the foregoing provisions in the case of a branch, by a scheme submitted to the Commissioners, in the case of a branch, with the approval of the parent society, for their sanction, providing for making good the deficiency within three years from the date of the valuation, in any of the following ways, namely (s): By reducing the rate of sickness benefit; by deferring the day from which it becomes payable; by reducing the period during which it is payable; by increasing the period which is required to elapse between two periods of disease or disablement to prevent the one being treated as a continuation of the other (t); by a compulsory levy in the form of an increase of the weekly rate of contributions (u) upon members of the society or branch who are insured persons; or by any other method approved by the Insurance Commissioners.

The scheme must not affect any person who becomes a member of the society or branch after the date of valuation, or who is over seventy years of age (b).

Transferred member.

If an insured person who is a member of the society or branch at the date at which the valuation disclosing the deficiency is made is transferred to another society or branch before the deficiency is made good, he remains liable to any levy or reduction of benefits in respect of the deficiency, and if he is transferred levy.

1731. Payment of a compulsory levy may be enforced in accordance with rules made by the society or branch; and such rules may be made as enable the society or branch to give notice to the employer requiring him to pay the levy as if it were part of the contribution payable by the employer on behalf of the member (d).

If a member chargeable with a levy falls into arrears, his arrears reckon as though their total sum, including the levy, consisted of the contributions payable by or in respect of him had no levy been made (e).

A member liable to a levy payable at intervals may relieve himself of the liability thereto, and a member subject to a diminution of benefits under a scheme may, with the consent of the society or branch, enjoy undiminished benefits, by paying the capitalised value of the levy or diminution of benefits (f).

1732. If within six months after the declaration of a deficiency (g) a scheme as aforesaid has not been submitted and sanctioned, or if it appears that the scheme is not being enforced by the society or branch, the Insurance Commissioners may themselves take over the administration of the affairs of the society or branch and take steps to make good the deficiency (h); but arrangements must be made, within three years, for restoring self-government to the society or branch, or, failing that, for transferring its members to other societies or branches or to the Deposit Contributors Fund (i).

deal with deficiency.

Disputes between the Commissioners and the society or branch as to the amount of the deficiency or as to the adequacy of any scheme proposed for making it good are to be submitted to an independent valuer appointed by the Lord Chief Justice, whose decision is final and conclusive (k).

1733. Where an approved society, not being a society with branches, includes among its members both men and women, its rules may provide that the statutory provisions relating to valuations, surpluses, and deficiencies are to apply as if it were a society consisting of two separate branches for male and female members respectively (l).

Grouping of branches.

1734. The rules of a society with branches may provide that the branches shall be grouped in geographical areas for the purposes of the statutory provisions relating to valuations, surpluses, and deficiencies, and that the branches in any area are to be treated, for such purposes, as if they formed a separate society, provided that the number of members who are insured persons in the area exceeds five thousand (m).

Members of a society with branches who are not members of any branch, and whose benefits are administered by the society itself, must be treated, for the purposes of the statutory provisions as to valuations, surpluses, and deficiencies, as if they formed a separate branch (n).

Grouping of societies.

1735. Approved societies may, with the consent of the Insurance Commissioners, form, for the purposes of valuation, an association, with a central financial committee, but so that such association shall have an aggregate membership of not less than five thousand (o). Any such approved societies as have not at the date of any valuation joined such an association will be grouped together for the purposes of valuation according to the county or county borough in which they carry on business (p). A society is deemed to carry on business only in the county or county borough in which its registered office or other principal place of business is situate; but where more than one hundred or more than one-sixth of the insured persons who are members of a grouped society at the date of any valuation reside in some other county or county borough, the proper proportion of any surplus or deficiency of the society is, on application, to be apportioned to the insurance committee (q) of that other county or county borough. In default of agreement between the insurance committees concerned the proportion is to be determined by the Insurance Commissioners (r). In calculating, for the purpose of association, the number of persons who are members of societies for the purposes of national health insurance, no account is to be taken of members who by reason of marriage are suspended from ordinary benefits and are not special voluntary contributors (s) or who are not insured persons (t).

societies in any association or group were branches of a single society, the central financial committee in the case of an association, and the insurance committee in the case of a group, being substituted for the central authority of the society. The approval of the central financial committee or insurance committee is not required to any scheme prepared by an associated or grouped society for the distribution of any surplus (w).

SECT. 10.
Financial Provisions.

Where an associated or grouped society is a society with branches, the statutory provisions requiring the approval of a society to a scheme prepared by a branch as to the distribution of a surplus or the making good of a deficiency are applicable (a); but the other provisions relating to surpluses and deficiencies of societies with branches do not apply to the society, but each branch, for the purposes of the statutory provisions as to association and grouping, is deemed to be a separate society (b).

1737. A central finance committee or insurance committee has no powers of control over the administration of associated or grouped societies beyond the power of refusing to make good a deficiency due to maladministration (c).

Extent of control.

1738. Exemption from the statutory provisions as to associating and grouping small societies may be allowed in the case of any society consisting of persons entitled to rights in a superannuation or other provident fund established for the benefit of persons employed by one or more employers, if the employer, in addition to the contributions payable by him (d), is responsible for the solvency of the fund, or for the benefits payable thereout, or is liable to pay a substantial part of, or to make substantial contributions to, or substantially to supplement the benefits payable out of the fund (e).

(v.) Dissolved Societies.

1739. The Insurance Commissioners may make regulations providing for the valuation of the assets and liabilities of dissolved societies and the reduction, either permanently or temporarily, in the event of a deficiency being disclosed, of the rates of benefits payable to members and the periods during which those benefits or any of them are payable, and for the establishment of a special fund to which contributions of such members are to be paid, and out of which their benefits are to be paid, and the application, subject to the prescribed modifications, adaptations and exceptions, to such fund and the members thereof, of the statutory provisions relating SUB-SECT. 7.—Reinsurance.

Reinsurance. 1740. A society with branches may provide, in its rules, for the branches reinsuring with the society their liabilities in respect of any of the benefits under the provisions relating to national health insurance (g), or, if the society is so organised that the branches in different geographical areas are grouped for the purposes of valuations, surpluses, and deficiencies (h), for such reinsurance either with the society or with the group (i).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Friendly Societies and Superannuation Funds.

Friendly societies.

1741. Registered friendly societies (j) in existence at the passing of the National Insurance Act, 1911 (k), which provided benefits similar to any of those conferred by the provisions of that Act relating to national health insurance (l), were required to submit to the Registrar of Friendly Societies a scheme for continuing, abolishing, reducing, or altering such benefits as respects members who became insured persons (m), and for continuing, abolishing, or reducing the contributions of such members, so, however, as not prejudicially to affect the solvency of the society. If on actuarial valuation it was shown that, by reason of the scheme or a supplementary scheme, any part of the existing funds of the society would be set free as not being required to meet the liabilities of the society, the scheme was required to include provisions for applying the funds so set free either towards providing other or increased benefits payable by the society to existing members, whether insured persons (m) or not, independently of the statutory provisions relating to national health insurance; or in reduction of such members' contributions in respect of such benefits; or towards the payment or repayment of contributions payable under the statutory provisions relating to national health insurance by such of its existing members as were entitled and elected to receive benefits under those provisions through the society (n).

A society with branches might also submit a scheme applicable to all its branches, and provide for the application of the whole or any part of the funds set free as above towards the discharge of any deficiencies in any of its branches revealed by the actuarial valuation. The rules of the society might, however, confer on

SECT. 10.
Financial Provisions.

A scheme duly confirmed by the Registrar of Friendly Societies is deemed to be incorporated in the registered rules of the society or branch and may be amended accordingly (p).

1742. The statutory provisions as to existing friendly societies apply, with the necessary adaptations, to superannuation or other provident funds established at the passing of the Act for the benefit of the persons employed by one or more employers, subject, however, to the modification that, where under the Act, deed, or other instrument establishing the fund or otherwise any sum is payable by the employer towards benefits secured by the Act or deed, and those benefits include benefits similar to any of those conferred by the statutory provisions relating to national health insurance (q), the scheme might provide for allowing the employer to deduct from any contributions payable by him as aforesaid towards benefits of a nature similar to those under national health insurance provisions an amount not exceeding the employer's contributions payable by him under those provisions (r). If the fund was one out of which were payable pensions or superannuation allowances which would be prejudicially affected by the foregoing requirements, the Insurance Commissioners were empowered to grant a certificate authorising the value of the prospective extension of national health insurance benefits, when the reserve values had been written off (s), to be brought into account in the valuation of the assets available for the discharge of the liabilities of the fund in respect of pensions and superannuation allowances (t).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Deposit Contributors.

1743. Contributions by or in respect of deposit contributors (a) are credited to a special fund called the Deposit Contributors Fund (b). Sums standing to the credit of the Deposit Contributors Fund in the National Health Insurance Fund are invested and interest on the investments credited as in the case of societies (c). Upon the death of a deposit contributor, four-sevenths, or in the case of a woman one-half, of the amount standing to his or her credit in the Deposit Contributors Fund is to be paid to his or her nominee or, in default of a nomination, to the person who would be entitled to receive the sum if it were money payable on the death of a member of a registered friendly society (e), and the balance is forfeited (f).

Where a deposit contributor proves to the insurance committee (g) that he has permanently ceased to reside in the United Kingdom, the same proportion of the amount standing to his credit may be paid to him (h).

Persons leaving approved
societies.

1744. If an insured person who is a member of an approved society leaves that society, whether voluntarily or by expulsion, and fails to become a member of another approved society within the prescribed time (i), his transfer value (k), if he does not become a deposit contributor, is dealt with as may be proscribed. If he becomes a deposit contributor, his transfer value is credited to him in the Deposit Contributors Fund; but if a reserve value (l) has been credited to the society in respect of him, such part thereof as is still outstanding, or, if the outstanding amount exceeds the transfer value, such part of the reserve value as is equal to the transfer value, is cancelled, and the amount, if any, by which the transfer value exceeds the amount so cancelled is carried to the credit of the deposit contributor (m).

Persons

societies.

1745. If an insured person who is a deposit contributor becomes a member of an approved society for the purposes of national health insurance, there is transferred to the society the amount standing to his credit in the Deposit Contributors Fund; but if that amount exceeds the value of the contributions paid by or in respect of him estimated on the assumption that he had been a member of an approved society since his entry into insurance (n), the excess is carried to the credit of the Deposit Contributors Fund, and if that amount is less than such value, the insured person is treated as being in arrear (o) to the amount of the deficiency (p).

1746. The statutory provisions relating to national health insurance apply, subject to certain modifications (q), to a woman who has been or is married, in like manner as if she had never been married (r).

Application
of statutory provisions.
Suspension of benefits.

1747. Where a woman who is an insured person (s) marries and ceases to be employed in an occupation which qualified her for insurance, she is suspended from receiving the ordinary benefits (t) until her husband's death (u), or in the case of a woman whose marriage has been dissolved or annulled, or who has, for not less than two years, been actually separated from or deserted by her husband, until the date when such dissolution or annulment takes effect, or the expiration of such period of two years, as the case may be (w). If she is a member of an approved society (a), one-third of her transfer value (b) is carried to the "married women's suspense account" (c); and if before marriage she was a voluntary contributor (d) she cannot continue to be such a contributor on the same conditions (e).

(q) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 44 (2). The amount so to be written off is determined as follows: there is deducted from an amount equal to two-thirds of the reserve value so credited to the society the sum of 9d. for every quarter contained in the period from her entry into insurance until her suspension, and the residue after such deduction is the amount to be written off the said reserve values. Where the reserve value credited in respect of a woman exceeds the amount of her transfer value at the date of her suspension as ascertained in accordance with any regulations made under the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 44, and for the time being in force, two-thirds of the excess must be added to the amount to be deducted as aforesaid. 1750. Where a woman who has been employed before marriage in an occupation bringing her within the category of employed contributors (b) continues to be so employed after marriage she is not suspended as above from receiving benefits so long as she continues to be so employed (c).

Where a married woman suspended as above from ordinary benefits becomes employed before her husband's death in an occupation whereby she becomes an employed contributor (d), contributions again become payable in respect of her and the suspension from ordinary benefits ceases; but, for the purposes of those benefits, she is, subject to regulations, treated as if she had not previously been an insured person (e).

date and, in the case of a woman who became a British subject subsequently to her joining a society, deemed to be the date upon which she became a British subject. For the purpose of these calculations each complete period of three months which has elapsed since the date on which the contributor entered into insurance is reckoned as a quarter, and any period of less than three months, if less than seven weeks, is disregarded, and, if seven weeks or more, is counted as a quarter (National Health Insurance (Married Women's Special Benefits) Regulations, 1914).

For the purpose of ascertaining the date at which she becomes entitled to receive benefits as such an employed contributor, she is treated as if she had entered into insurance for the first time at the date when she ceased to be suspended. If she elected to become, while so suspended, a voluntary contributor under ibid., s. 44 (2) (see pp. 975, 976, ante), she continues to be entitled, until she becomes entitled to receive benefits as an employed contributor, to receive the sickness benefit and disablement benefit to which she would be entitled as such a voluntary contributor, and her rates of benefit during her husband's lifetime are such as would have applied if she had not been suspended. If she did not so elect she is, for the purpose of ascertaining such rates, treated as if she had entered into insurance for the first time at the date when she ceased to be suspended. Where a married woman to whom a certificate under ibid., s. 44 (8), has been granted (see p. 978, post) surrenders that certificate, she is, for the purpose of these Regulations, treated as though she had become employed on the date when she surrendered the certificate, and as though during the period when the certificate was in force she had been a voluntary contributor under ibid., s. 44 (2) (see p. 975, ante) (National Health Insurance (Employed Married

In either case there is transferred from the Married Women's Suspense Account to the society the reserve value calculated according to the appropriate tables (h). If at any time after her husband's death she becomes an employed contributor (i), the period between her marriage and the expiration of one month from her husband's death is disregarded for the purpose of reckoning arrears (k), and there is transferred from the Married Women's Suspense Account to her society the proper reserve value calculated according to the appropriate tables (l).

1752. Where a woman who was a married woman on the 15th July, 1912, at any time subsequently either before or within a year after her husband's death becomes an employed contributor (m) and a member of an approved society, she is entitled to full benefits although at the time of so becoming she is seventeen years of age or upwards (n).

Deficiency
of funds.

Where a deficiency has been found in respect of the society or branch of which a woman is a member at a valuation previous to her becoming suspended from ordinary benefits, and that deficiency has not been made good at the time of her marriage, or where a woman is in arrears at that time, the Commissioners prescribe the necessary adjustments in the sums transferred to the Married Women's Suspense Account, the balance of her transfer value, and her rates of benefit (v).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Navy, Army, and Reserve Forces.

1756. Employment in the naval or military service of the Crown, including service in officers' training corps, is an employment which is excepted from the general provisions relating to national health insurance (a), and special provisions apply to that employment.

Special
provisions.

These special provisions do not apply to a seaman, marine, or soldier who entered or enlisted before the age of sixteen until he attains that age. On attaining that age those provisions apply to him as if he had entered and enlisted at the time he became sixteen (b).

(g) As to applying for and granting such a certificate, see National Health Insurance (Claims for Exemption, Married Women) Regulations (England), 1914. The certificate is granted by the applicant's society. 1757. For the purposes of national health insurance (c), there is to be deducted from the pay of every seaman and marine (d) within the meaning of the Naval and Marine Pay and Pensions Act, 1865 (e), and of every soldier (f) of the regular forces (other than soldiers of His Majesty's Indian Forces, the Royal Malta Artillery, and native soldiers of any regiment raised outside the United Kingdom), the sum of 1½d. per week. The Admiralty and Army Council respectively contribute out of Navy and Army funds the sum of 1½d. per week in respect of every such seaman, marine, and soldier who has joined an approved society (g), and in respect of men who have not joined an approved society such weekly sum as may be prescribed (h). No such deduction is made from the pay of a seaman, marine, or soldier who has completed his first engagement and has re-engaged for pension unless he so elects within the prescribed time (i). No contribution is made by the Admiralty or Army Council in respect of any week in respect of which such a deduction is not made (k).

A seaman, marine, or soldier who was an insured person (l) at the date of his entry and enlistment, and who had joined and was at that date a member of an approved society, or who within six months from such date (if serving on the 15th July, 1912, within six months from that date), or within such longer period as may be prescribed, joins an approved society, is treated as an employed

(c) By the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 46 (1), the purpose of these provisions is declared to be the provision of benefits for seamen, marines, and soldiers "during their term of service and after their return to civil life." As to the payment and collection of contributions in respect of the Navy and Army, see National Health Insurance (Collection of Contributions, Navy and Marine) Regulations, 1914 (Stat. R. & O., 1914, No. 872); National Health Insurance (Collection of Contributions, Soldiers) Regulations, 1914 (Stat. R. & O., 1914, No. 873).

(d) "Marine" includes every warrant officer of marines, except Royal Marine gunners (National Insurance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 22).

(e) 28 & 29 Vict. c. 73.

(f) "Soldier" does not include a soldier who has not been finally accepted for service (National Insurance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 22).

(g) As to approved societies, see pp. 937, 938, ante. The provisions as to existing friendly societies (see pp. 972, 973, ante) apply to seamen, marines, and soldiers from whose pay deductions are made as above (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 72 (4)).

(h) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 46 (1). Such weekly contribution is to be "such as may from time to time be required to keep the Navy and Army Insurance Fund solvent" (ibid., s. 46 (3) (c)). By the National Health Insurance (Admiralty and Army Council Contributions) Regulations, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 735), the sum is fixed at 1½d. for the time being.

(i) As to the prescribed time, see the National Health Insurance (Naval and Military Forces) (Time Limits) Regulations, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 925), as amended by the National Health Insurance (Naval and Military Forces) (Time Limits) Regulations, 1912, Amendment Regulations, 1913 (Stat. R. & O., 1913, p. 957); and Amendment Regulations, 1914.

contributor (m), subject, until his discharge (n), to the following modifications, namely (o): the employed rate (p) is 3*d.*, and the deductions from his pay and the contributions in respect of him by the Admiralty or Army Council are treated as the contributions paid in respect of him; he is not entitled to medical, sanatorium, sickness, or disablement benefits (q), but he is entitled to maternity benefit (r), although he and his wife are resident outside the United Kingdom at the time of the confinement (s); and the sum to be retained out of each weekly contribution by the Insurance Commissioners in respect of reserve values (t) is 1*d.*, the remaining five-ninths of a penny being paid out of the Navy and Army Insurance Fund (u).

1759. The following provisions apply in the case of seamen, marines, and soldiers who have not joined an approved society, namely (a): the Navy and Army Insurance Fund is constituted, and into that fund is paid (1) the balance remaining after deducting from the amount of the deductions from their pay and the contributions in respect of them (which go in the first instance into the National Health Insurance Fund (b)) the like amount as would be retained by the Commissioners in respect of reserve values if the men were members of approved societies (c); and (2) a sum, annually, out of public funds equal to two-ninths of the amount which would have been payable in the year in respect of medical, sanatorium, sickness, and disablement benefits (including administration expenses) had the men concerned been members of approved societies and entitled to such benefits as employed contributors (d). If any such man was at the date of his entry or enlistment a deposit contributor (e), he is, for the purpose of dealing with the sum standing to his credit in the Deposit Contributors Fund (f), treated as if the Navy and Army Insurance Fund were an approved society, and he had at the date of his entry or enlistment become a member thereof. In the case of men serving on the 15th July, 1912, there is credited to the Navy and Army Insurance Fund such reserve value as would have been credited to an approved society had he at that date become a member of such society as an employed contributor (g); but no reserve value is so credited if at that date he had completed his first engagement and had re-engaged for pension, unless he elects to have deductions made from his pay, or unless, not having so elected, he becomes on discharge (h) entitled to benefits payable out of that fund (i). Until discharged (h) every such man is entitled to maternity benefit (k) out of the Navy and Army Insurance Fund, and this although he and his wife may be at the date of the confinement resident outside the United Kingdom (l).

1760. On the discharge (m) of a seaman, marine, or soldier from whose pay deductions have been made up to the date of his discharge, there is debited to the Navy and Army Insurance Fund and if he becomes a member of an approved society within the prescribed time from his discharge (n) there is credited to that society the transfer value which would have been payable in respect of him had he been a member of an approved society throughout his period of service, or in the case of a man serving on the 15th July, 1912, since that date (o). If he does not so become a member of an approved society, such transfer value is carried to his credit in the Deposit Contributors Fund (p) unless he becomes entitled to benefits out of the Navy and Army Insurance Fund (q), and, if he becomes a deposit contributor (r), so much of the reserve value, if any, credited to that fund in respect of him is cancelled as would have been cancelled had he been transferred from an approved society to the Deposit Contributors Fund (s). A man discharged (t) from service who proves that the state of his health is such that he cannot obtain admission to an approved society may, if he so elects, on making application to the Insurance Commissioners within three months of his discharge (u), or such 1761. In the foregoing special provisions relating to men who are or have been seamen, marines, or soldiers, the date of the man's entry or enlistment, or if serving on the 15th July, 1912, that date, is treated as the date of his entry into insurance, unless he was an insured person (i) at the date of his entry or enlistment; deductions from pay, with the corresponding contributions by the Admiralty and Army Council, are treated as payments of contributions at the employed rate (k) for the purpose of reckoning the number of contributions made in respect of him, arrears (l), and transfer value (m), and for the purpose of qualifying to become a

Reserve and Territorial Forces.

1762. The foregoing provisions relating to seamen, marines, and soldiers apply, subject to prescribed adaptations and modifications, to men belonging to the Naval Reserves when on service during war or any emergency, and to men of the Army Reserve when called out on permanent service, and to men of the Territorial Force when called out on embodiment (c).

Where a man of the Naval Reserves, the Army Reserve, or the Territorial Force is being trained and is in receipt of Navy or Army pay, he is, for the purposes of national health insurance, deemed, whilst so training, to be in an insurable employment (d) and in the sole employment of the Crown, but this provision does not apply to a man who was not immediately before the training an insured person (e), except where specified in a special order made by the Insurance Commissioners (f).

1764. The general statutory provisions relating to national health insurance apply to masters (m), seamen (n), and apprentices to the sea service and the sea-fishing service, subject to the following special provisions:—

Application
of statutory
provisions.

Neither sickness (b) nor disablement (c) benefits are payable to those persons when suffering from any disease or disablement in respect of any period during which the owner of the ship is under a legal liability to defray the expenses of surgical and medical advice and attendance and medicine, and of maintenance (d); but in respect of that part of such period during which the owner is not liable to pay wages to the master, seaman, or apprentice so suffering (e), sickness benefit may be paid in whole or part to or for the relief or maintenance of any dependants he may have, provided he was serving on a home-trade ship (f). Such benefit is paid or applied as the society or committee administering it thinks fit after consulting, whenever possible, with the master, seaman, or apprentice concerned (g). For the purpose of calculating the rate and duration of sickness benefit, such benefit is deemed to have been paid from the commencement of the disease or disablement until the determination of the aforesaid liability to defray expenses, and during such period the man is not entitled to medical benefit (h).

By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 742, "master" includes every person (except a pilot) having command or charge of any ship.

to be the subject of compulsory health insurance (i); but, except in cases where the ship is engaged in regular trade on foreign stations (k), the employer is liable to pay the same contributions in respect of him as would otherwise be payable by him as employer's contributions (l).

In the case of such persons serving on foreign-going ships (m) or ships engaged in regular trade on foreign stations (k), the employed rate (n) and the employer's contributions (o) are each reduced by 1*l.* a week, and every four weekly contributions paid in any calendar year by a master, seaman, or apprentice whilst serving on such a ship are, for the purposes of determining the number of contributions to be paid by him in that year (p) and of calculating arrears (q), treated as five such contributions. This provision does not affect the number of employer's contributions (o) to be paid in respect of those persons, but no employer's contributions paid in respect of any week for which no contribution is payable by the master, seaman, or apprentice are taken into account in reckoning the amount of his arrears (q); and there is credited to the approved society (r) of which the master, seaman, or apprentice is a member, or, if he is a deposit contributor (s), to his account in the Deposit Contributors Fund (t), a sum equal to two-fifths of the amount of the contributions actually paid in respect of him, and an equal sum is treated as having been expended as sickness benefit (u), and the proper proportion thereof is accordingly paid out of moneys provided by Parliament (a).

Seamen's National Insurance Society.

1766. Any master, seaman, or apprentice who is subject to compulsory insurance (b), or entitled to be or become a voluntary contributor (c), is entitled to join the Seamen's National Insurance Society constituted under a Board of Trade scheme and

Members of the society are entitled to medical, sanatorium, sickness, disablement, and maternity benefits (g), and, in addition, to such other benefits as may be provided under a scheme to be prepared by the committee. Such other benefits include pensions for long sea service, and preference may be given by the scheme to those who have served in foreign-going ships (h) or ships engaged in foreign trade over those who have served in the coasting and home-trade (i) ships. The scheme provides for making a proper proportion of the sums credited to the society in respect of contributions paid by employers for men neither domiciled nor residing in the United Kingdom (k) applicable towards paying pensions or superannuation allowances granted by other approved societies to members with such sea service that, had they been members of the society, they would have been entitled to pensions under the scheme; and in the case of a transfer of a member of the society to another approved society, his transfer value (l) is calculated with reference to the liabilities of the society for benefits other than pensions as aforesaid (m).

Members of the society, for the purposes of national health insurance, are deemed to reside in England. Their medical and sanatorium benefits are administered by the society, but the society may agree with insurance committees (n) for the administration by the committees of those benefits in relation to individual members of the society (o).

The rules of the Seamen's National Insurance Society must provide for allowing a member who leaves the sea service and is unable to obtain admission to another approved society on account of his health to continue a member of the former society for the purposes of health insurance; and such rules may provide that a member of the society who has fulfilled the conditions entitling him to pension as aforesaid is not to be deprived of his right to the pension by reason only that he has ceased to be a member at the time when the pension first becomes payable or ceases to be so at any subsequent time (p).

1771. An insured woman who was a British subject before marriage, but ceased to be so on marrying an alien (g), is not subject to the foregoing limitations (h); and where the wife of an alien insured person who is subject to these limitations was before marriage a British subject, the maternity benefit payable in respect of his insurance is, subject to regulations to be made by the Commissioners, increased by two-sevenths, the amount of such increase being paid out of moneys provided by Parliament (i). Moreover, the limitations do not apply to any person who, on the 4th May, 1911, was a member of a society which, or a separate section of which, becomes an approved society (j), or which amalgamates with or transfers its engagements to an approved society (k), or which proves to the satisfaction of the Commissioners that it has organised, either solely or jointly with other bodies, an approved society for the benefit of its members (l), and had then been resident in the United Kingdom for five years or upwards; or to any person who is transferred to an approved society (m) or the Deposit Contributors Fund (n) in pursuance of an arrangement with a foreign State (o).

1772. The Insurance Commissioners may make special orders (p) specifying classes of employment in which a custom or practice prevails, and, where the custom or practice is local, the locality where it prevails, under which the persons employed receive full remuneration (q) during the whole or any part of periods of disease or disablement (r). assistant; warehouseman, including a porter or packer employed in a warehouse; resident tutor or governess; journalist; press telegraphist; teacher; teacher or worker for religious or philanthropic purposes; commercial traveller, whose remuneration is wholly or mainly by way of salary or wages; domestic servant, including a menial servant employed in whole-time service in or about a private residence; porter, messenger, commissionaire or watchman in a club, hotel, office, shop or other place in which a trade or business is carried on; employment by or under a co-operative society; usher or messenger of a county court; employment by way of manual labour by or under any of the following bodies (such employment being deemed a separate employment and not including employment by or under any other body (including a combination of local authorities) or in any institution herein specified), namely:—a council of a county; a council of a borough (including a metropolitan borough); a council of an urban district; a council of a rural district; a poor law authority; a visiting committee constituted under the Lunacy Act, 1890; a joint board constituted under the Public Health Acts, 1875 to 1908; a joint committee appointed under s. 57 of the Local Government Act, 1894; a combination of two or more local authorities combining in providing a common hospital under s. 131 of the Public Health Act, 1875, or combining together for the purpose mentioned in s. 285 of that Act; a hospital committee constituted under the Isolation Hospital Acts; an education committee established under the Education Acts, 1870 to 1909; employment by way of manual labour in an institution certified under the Children Act, 1908, or the Inebriates Act, 1898, or the Elementary Education (Blind and Deaf Children) Act, 1893, or the Elementary Education (Defective and Epileptic Children) Act, 1899; employment otherwise than by way of manual labour by or under such body or in any such institution as aforesaid (in each of the foregoing cases provided that by the terms of the employment the person employed is entitled to not less than one week's notice of the termination of his employment); bailiff appointed to assist the high bailiff of a county court; employment as any kind of farm servant under a contract of not less than six months' duration (male persons only) in Northumberland; Durham; and Yorks, North Riding (North and North-Eastern parts); employment as a farm servant in charge of animals (male persons only) in Berks; Cambridgeshire (North); Dorset (East and South); Gloucestershire; Hampshire; Kent; Lincolnshire; Nottinghamshire; Oxfordshire; Rutlandshire; Warwickshire; Wiltshire; Worcestershire; and Yorks, East Riding, provided the person employed is entitled to not less than one week's notice of termination of employment; employment as a farm servant (male unmarried persons only) in Cumberland; parts of Lancashire, namely, the hundreds of North and South Lonsdale, Amounderness, Leyland and Blackburn; Westmoreland; and Yorks, West Riding, provided the person employed is entitled to not less than one week's notice of termination of employment; employment as a farm servant under a contract of not less than six months' duration where the terms of service include board and lodging in the farmhouse (male unmarried persons only) in Cheshire; Derbyshire; Hereford (West); Shropshire; and Staffordshire. To these employments the general provisions of the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), are adapted by the following special provisions, namely: (i.) Where a scheme is made under ibid., ss. 37 (see p. 967, ante) or 38 (see p. 968, ante), the provision made by the scheme with respect to persons to whom the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 47, applies may be different from the provision made with respect to other insured persons. (ii.) Every person on entering any employment in which he will be a person to whom ibid., s. 47, applies must, whether he was or was not previously such a person, give notice of the fact, if he is a member of an approved society (see pp. 937, 938, ante), to the society, and, if he is not a member of an approved society, to the insurance committee (see pp. 933 et seq., ante), and every such notice must state whether the person giving the notice is engaged for a term of six months certain or not. (iii.) The employer of any person to whom the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 47, applies and who on employment included in such a special order may give notice to the Commissioners in the prescribed form of his desire, to take advantage of the special provisions applicable to such cases (s).

Liability of employer.

1773. The employer thereupon becomes liable to pay full remuneration (t) to every such person during any period or periods not exceeding six weeks in the aggregate in any one year during which such person may suffer from any disease or disablement commencing while in his employment, although such person may have left his employment before the expiration of that time; while if the engagement is for not less than six months certain, the period of full remuneration is the whole period of any disease or disablement lasting less than six weeks, and the first six weeks of any disease or disablement lasting longer than six weeks even though the aggregate exceeds six weeks, but the liability ceases after the expiration of the term of the engagement (u).

1774. As regards the persons employed, the provisions relating to national health insurance apply to them (except to any employed at a rate of remuneration (t) of less than 10s. a week (w)), subject to certain modifications (x). Sickness benefit (a) is not payable for any period during which full remuneration is so payable by the employer, but, for the purpose of calculating the rate and has been suffering from disease or disablement must, on the demand of that person, and also, if that person is a member of an approved society, on the demand of his society, or, if that person is not a member of an approved society, on the demand of the insurance committee, deliver to him, or to the society or insurance committee, as the case may be, particulars in writing of the date on which the disease or disablement commenced and terminated, together with a statement whether the employed person did or did not perform any work during the whole or any part of the period of the disease or disablement. By the National Health Insurance (Special Customs) Order, 1912 (No. 3) (Stat. R. & O., 1912, p. 701), the employments under the Crown included in ibid., Sched. I., III., and by the National Health Insurance (Special Customs) Provisional Order, 1913 (No. 1) (Stat. R. & O., 1913, p. 793), the Crown employments included in ibid., Sched. I., are so specified and the general provisions of the Act are adapted thereto.

R. & O., 1913, p. 987). The notice may be withdrawn by giving three months' notice to the Insurance Commissioners as from the commencement of the next calendar year, and the above special provisions then cease to apply as from that date (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 47 (10)). Any question whether an employer is entitled to avail himself of these special provisions is determined by the Insurance committee (see pp. 933 et seq., ante), subject to appeal to the Commissioners (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 47 (8)).

duration thereof, is deemed to have been paid for six weeks before the date as from which it becomes actually payable. The employed rate (b) is reduced by 2d., or in the case of a woman 1½d., the reduction in the employer's weekly contribution (c) being 1d., or ½d. in respect of a woman, and in the employed contributor's weekly contribution 1d. There is credited to the approved society of which any such person is a member (d), or to his account in the Deposit Contributors Fund (e) if he is a deposit contributor (f), the difference between the amount of contributions at such reduced rate actually paid in respect of him and the amount which would have been paid if those contributions had been at the full rate, and the difference is treated as having been expended on sickness benefit, the proper proportion thereof being paid out of moneys provided by Parliament (g). Contributions are not payable in respect of any period of disease or disablement during which full remuneration is payable if the prescribed notice has been given. The rules of an approved society (h) or insurance committee (i) as to notices and proof of disease and disablement may extend to periods of disease and disablement during which full remuneration is payable as above.

contributors.

1775. Where a person on ceasing to be employed as above becomes temporarily unemployed or ceases to be employed in compulsorily insurable employment (k), and becomes a voluntary contributor paying contributions at the employed rate (l), the foregoing provisions as to the reduced employed rate and as to credits to his approved society or to his account in the Deposit Contributors Fund continue to apply in respect of him, and sickness benefit (m) is not payable in respect of the first six weeks of any period of disease or disablement commencing after he ceased to be so employed, or after he became a voluntary contributor, as the case may be, but, for the purpose of calculating the rate and duration thereof, is deemed to have been paid during those six weeks, and a disease or disablement is not, for the purposes of sickness benefit, treated as a continuation of a previous disease or disablement (n) unless the medical practitioner in attendance certifies that it is so in fact (o). Any employers wishing to avail themselves of the foregoing provisions as respects the persons employed by them in a class of employment, or in a locality, in which no such custom or practice as aforesaid exists, may apply to the Commissioners for a special order extending those provisions as respects the applicants to the employment or locality in question, and the Commissioners may accede to the request if they think fit after ascertaining the views of the persons so employed (r).

1777. The foregoing provisions as to reduced insurance in cases where the employer pays full remuneration during sickness extend, in respect of persons employed by or under the Crown, to cases where two-thirds only of the full remuneration are payable during periods or parts of periods of disease or disablement, if payable for not less than three months in any year (s).

In other respects the general provisions relating to national health insurance apply to persons employed by or under the Crown (t). In the case of persons in the private service of the Crown, the head of the department of the Royal Household in which he is employed is deemed his employer (a).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Casual and Intermittent Employment.

*Modification of statutory
provisions.

1779. The Insurance Commissioners may modify, by special order, the general statutory provisions as to national health insurance in their application to persons whose employment is of a casual or intermittent nature and to the employers of such persons. Any such order may apply either generally or to particular trades or industries or branches thereof, or to particular localities. Where any such order is restricted to a particular trade, industry or branch in a particular locality, it may extend to other persons if employed in the same class of employment as those persons to whom the order primarily relates (i).

order.

1780. The order may prescribe the amount of the employed rate (k); the respective contributions of employer and of employed contributor (l), the manner, proportions, and periods of payment, recovery and collection of contributions, and the apportionment among employers of the amounts payable by employers; but the employer's contributions must not exceed 6*d.*, or the employed contributor's (l) contributions (m) 4*d.* (or in the case of a woman 3*d.*) in any week; and if the contributions are payable day by day the employed contributor's (l) contribution must not exceed 1*d.* for any day (n).

draft order.

1781. Special orders relating to these particular matters must be laid before Parliament after the manner of regulations made under the Act by the Insurance Commissioners, so that either House may within twenty-one days present an address praying for the annulment of any such order (o). The proposed special order must also be first issued in draft and opportunity given for objection thereto (a).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Inmates of Charitable Institutions.

1782. A certificate of exemption from compulsory health insurance(c) may be granted by the Insurance Commissioners in respect of the inmates of any institution carried on for charitable or reformatory purposes who are inmates for such purposes and are employed by the managers thereof, if it is proved that such inmates receive maintenance and medical attendance when sick. It is, however, a condition of such exemption that the managers are to be liable to pay certain sums in respect of any such inmate who, having been an inmate for more than six months, leaves the institution. Such sums are, in the case of a person who was below sixteen years of age on entering the institution, such capital sum as will suffice to secure him benefits at the full rate (d), and, in the case of a person who was at the time of entering the institution of the age of sixteen or upwards and an insured person (e) and a member of an approved society (f), a sum equal to the value, calculated in the prescribed manner, of the contributions which would otherwise have been payable in respect of him during the time he was in the institution (g).

Every such inmate, if he was an insured person (h) before entering the institution, is suspended from benefits while he is an inmate; and, if at that time he was a member of an approved society (i) and has been an inmate of the institution for more than six months, the time during which he is in the institution is disregarded for the purpose of reckoning arrears (k).

The Insurance Commissioners determine, in accordance with regulations (p), any question which may arise as to the rate of contributions payable by or in respect of any insured person (q), or as to the rates of contributions payable in respect of an employed contributor (r) by the employer and contributor respectively (s). The same tribunal determines questions as to whether any employment or class of employment is or will be employment to which compulsory health insurance applies (t), or as to whether

The Commissioners must give notice of the application to parties appearing to be interested, except where the question is whether a class of employment is within compulsory insurance, in which case public notice is given. The Commissioners may allow parties interested, as well as the applicant, to be heard at the hearing of the application, and either may, with the consent of the Commissioners, be represented. Persons interested are also permitted to make representations to the Commissioners in writing. The Commissioners may dispose of an application summarily, without giving notice of the application and without holding a hearing. The decision is given in writing in the prescribed form, and need not be accompanied with reasons. The Commissioners periodically publish their collected decisions under the National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 66, and the National Insurance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 27 (2); see Memo. 151 (second edition) published in February, 1914.

(q) The regulations may provide for such questions being determined, in the case of any person who is or is about to become a member of an approved society, by the society (National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 66 (1) (ii.)). The regulations (see note (p), supra) so provide, unless the question is one the decision on which may affect the interest of an employer, or involve the payment of a portion of any contribution out of moneys voted by Parliament, or affect the amount of any reserve value to be credited to any society.

Moreover, the Commissioners may, instead of themselves deciding whether any class of employment is or will be employment to which compulsory insurance applies, submit the question for the decision of the High Court (b).

Determination of Questions and Disputes.

1786. Subject to the last preceding provisions, any dispute between an approved society or branch and a person who is or has been an insured person and member or anyone claiming through such person, or between an approved society and any person as to whether that person is or was at any date a member thereof for health insurance purposes, or between an approved society and any branch thereof, or between any branches of an approved society, relating to anything done or omitted by such person, society, or branch under the provisions relating to health insurance, is decided in accordance with the rules of the society, with a right of appeal to the Insurance Commissioners (c).

Approved societies.

1787. Any similar dispute between an insured person and the insurance committee, or any dispute between two or more approved societies or between an approved society and an insurance committee or between two or more insurance committees, is decided by the Insurance Commissioners (d), whose decision is final (e).

(y) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 66 (1) (i). For the procedure, see County Court Rules, Ord. 42A, rr. 1-5. The appellant must proceed by petition in the county court in the district of which he resides, and the petition of appeal must be filed within one month from the date of the decision appealed against (ibid., r. 2).

(a) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 66 (1) (i).

(b) Ibid., s. 66 (1) (iii). For the procedure, see R. S. C., Ord. 55B, and Appendix B, Form 18B. Proceedings are taken in the Chancery Division by originating notice of motion.

(c) National Insurance Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 55), s. 67 (1); National Insurance Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 27. Where such rules provide for dealing with disputes, the county court has no jurisdiction (Bailey v. Co-operative Wholesale Society (Insurance Section), [1914] 2 K. B. 233, where a question as to the adequacy of the description of the disease or disablement in the medical certificate sent to the society in support of a claim for sickness benefit was held to be a dispute within the meaning of the society's rules). But if no objection is taken to the jurisdiction of the county court at the hearing, the want of jurisdiction cannot be relied upon in an appeal to the High Court (Taylor v. National Amalgamated Approved Society, [1914] 2 K. B. 352).

SECT. 12. Determination of Questions and Disputes. 1788. The Insurance Commissioners may appoint referees to determine any such appeal or dispute submitted to them (f), and may make regulations as to procedure on appeals (g) or disputes (h). The Arbitration Act, 1889 (i), only applies to such proceedings to the extent provided by such regulations (j).

False statements.

1789. For knowingly making any false statement or false representation for the purpose of obtaining any benefit or payment or the crediting of a reserve value, either for himself or any other person, a person is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment not exceeding three months with or without hard labour (k).

Non-payment of contributions.

For failure to pay any contributions in respect of an employed contributor an employer is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £10 for each offence, and to pay to the Insurance Commissioners the amount of the unpaid contributions in satisfaction thereof. Proceedings may be taken within one year from the commission of the alleged offence (l). Where an employer has (g) The National Health Insurance (Appeals and Disputes) Regulations (England), 1912, Parts I. and II., prescribe the procedure and forms in regard to appeals from decisions under rules of approved societies. The leave of the Commissioners is the necessary preliminary to such appeal except in certain specified cases included in ibid., Sched. III. Notice of appeal must be sent to the Commissioners within one month from the date of the decision appealed from or the date of the receipt of notice of grant of leave to appeal, and must include a concise statement of the appellant's case. A notification of the appeal and a copy of the notice of appeal are sent by the Commissioners to the respondent, who must furnish a concise statement of the case on which he will rely. The parties will be bound by their particulars unless leave to amend is obtained. The Commissioners may extend the time for giving notice of appeal. At least fourteen days' notice of the hearing is given to the parties, and the decision is communicated to the parties in writing. Persons interested in the appeal, in addition to the parties, may be permitted to attend and be heard. Parties and persons entitled to be heard may be represented, but only with the consent of the tribunal. There is no appeal under these regulations from the decision of a dispute decided under the Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 25), s. 68 (6) (see title FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, Vol. XV., pp. 175 et seq.).

(h) The National Health Insurance (Appeals and Disputes) Regulations (England), 1912, Parts I. and III., prescribe the procedure and forms in regard to disputes between insured persons and insurance committees. Persons desiring the decision of the Commissioners on a dispute send them a notice of application in the prescribed form. No preliminary permission is necessary. The procedure on the notice of application is similar to that which follows the notice of appeal; see note (g), supra.

been convicted of such an offence, then, if notice of the intention to do so is served with the summons or warrant, evidence may be given of failure or neglect by the employer to pay other contributions in respect of the same employed contributor during the year preceding the date when the information was laid, and the employer is then liable to pay to the Commissioners the total amount of the contributions he is proved to have failed or neglected to pay (m).

SECT. 18.
Penalties and Civil Proceedings.

If an employer deducts or attempts to deduct the whole or any part of the employer's contribution from the wages or other remuneration of an employed contributor, or if any person buys, takes in exchange, or takes in pawn from an insured person, or any person acting on his behalf, on any pretence whatever, any insurance card or insurance book, he is liable to a fine not exceeding £10 (n).

Deduction of contributions.

For contravention of or non-compliance with any of the statutory provisions and regulations relating to national health insurance in respect of which no special penalty is provided, the maximum penalty is a fine of £10 (o).

General breach of statutory

No person is liable to any penalty if he has acted in conformity with any decision of the Insurance Commissioners or the Insurance Committee (p).

1790. If it is found at any time that a person has received any payment or benefit under the provisions relating to health insurance to which he is not lawfully entitled, he or his personal representatives are liable to repay the amount to the Insurance Commissioners. When recovered, the Commissioners carry the same to the credit of the society of which such person was a member, or if he was not a member of any approved society, to the credit of the Deposit Contributors Fund. Such amounts are recovered as debts due to the Crown (q).

of benefits.

1791. In addition to proceedings as aforesaid, a member of an approved society who has been deprived of benefits by reason of his employer's failure or neglect to pay contributions in respect of him may take civil proceedings against such employer for the value of the right he has lost. In any such proceedings the employer may be ordered to pay to the Insurance Commissioners any sum so found due, and by them it is credited to the society of which the person was a member. Such person thereupon becomes entitled to the normal benefits from the society together with the amount of the loss of benefits already sustained (r).

SECT. 14.—Inquiries.

Procedure.

1792. At any inquiry held by the Insurance Commissioners or by any committee or person appointed by them under the statutory provision or regulations relating to national health insurance, the witnesses are examined on oath if the Commissioners think fit or any of the parties so demand. The committee or person appointed to hold an inquiry has power to administer oaths for the purpose (s).
